MENMUIR,

WITH THE PARISHES OF CARESTON AND FEARN.

MENMUIR is a parish, six and a half miles from north to south, and four and a half from east to west, and lies about five miles north-west from Brechin, its post town. It is bounded on the north by Stracathro and Lethnot, on the south by Brechin and Careston, on the west by Fearn, and on the east by Brechin and Stracathro. The southern part is flat, and forms the vale of the Cruick water; to the north it is hilly and healthy. In the northern part of the parish are the Catterthuns, "with the best specimen of a bill fort in Europe." The parish, which embraces an area of 10,100 acres, in 1881 contained 755 inhabitants.

CARESTON or (Caraldston) is a small parish four miles west from Brechin, its post town, and the same distance from Tannadice, situated between the two latter, and on the north bank of the South Esk, and to the east of the Noran water, which flows through and unites in this parish, which is bounded on the north by Menmuir, on the east by Brechin, on the south by Aberlemno, and on the west by Tannadice and Fearn. The land is composed of beautiful and well cultivated braes, sloping to the south. The only object of immediate interest in the parish is the castle of Careston, erected about the year 1400, of which John Adamson, Esq. is the proprietor. It was formerly one of the residences of the Earls of Crawford. Above the mantelpiece, in what is called the old drawing room are depicted the royal arms of Scotland, under which is an inscription, one of the family having married King Robert II.'s eldest daughter. Although it cannot boast of much ornament in its construction, yet it carries in its appearance an aspect of grandeur well suited to a baronial castle. Careston parish comprises 2,085 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 194.

FEARN (or Fern) is a parish seven miles west from Brechin, its post town, and ten miles north-east of Forfar, situated at the foot of some of the Grampian hills. It is intersected by the Cruick water, and bounded on the south by that of Noran. Its form is nearly elliptic; on the south-west is the parish of Tannadice, on the north the united parish of Lethnot and Navar, and on the east Menmuir and Careston. The surface presents rich pastoral hills, and low grounds finely cultivated and enclosed, with extensive plantations of fir and other timber. Near the Noran stands the formerly celebrated Vane Castle, now a ruinous skeleton; it is about seven miles west of Brechin. Acreage of parish, 8,792; population in 1881, 316.

MONTROSE,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF CRAIG, DUN, FERRYDEN, HILLSIDE, LOGIE-PERT, MARYTON, AND USAN.

MONTROSE is a royal burgh and seaport, the capital of its parish, and a branch station of the Scottish North-Eastern section of the Caledonian railway, 72 miles N.N.E. from Edinburgh, 29 N.E. from Dundee, 28 S.S.W. from Stonehaven, 21 E. by N. from Forfar, 13 S.S.W. from Inverbervie, 12 S. from Arbroath, and 8½ E. from Brechin. Montrose is also an intermediate station on the North British East Coast railway system, a route which considerably lessens the distance to the south. The German Ocean, the rivers North and South Esk, and a large expanse of water designated "Montrose Basin," so nearly encompass the town as to constitute its site a peninsula. It was anciently called Celurca, but the derivation of its modern appellation, Montrose, has been controverted by etymologists. Camden derives the name from the Latin Mons Rosarum, the "Mount of Roses," which is countenanced by the seal of the town bearing the ornament of roses, with the motto Mare ditat, Rosa decorat—"the sea enriches, and the rose adorns." Montrose is connected with many important events in Scottish history. It is mentioned as the port from which Sir James Douglas embarked in 1330, with a numerous and splendid retinue, on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, carrying along with him the heart of Robert Bruce. It is distinguished as the first place in Scotland where the Greek language was taught, and as having sent forth from its seminary the celebrated scholar Andrew Melville; it was the birth-place of the warlike Marquis of Montrose, and the house in which he was born was for some years occupied as an inn. In the same house the old Pretender spent his last night in Scotland. Part of it is still used as a private dwelling-house. This town is also celebrated as the birth-place of Joseph Hume, the distinguished statesman, who represented Montrose for a great number of years in the British Senate, and to whose memory a beautiful monument has been raised in High street; in the same street is a statue of the late Sir Robert Peel. Montrose formerly bestowed the title of duke on the chief of the Crawford family; but this having been cancelled in the reign of James IV., another title was created and bestowed on the family of Graham, who derived their title from their lands at Alt or Upper Montrose now commonly called Old Montrose, but they do not now own a yard of land in the parish from which they take their title. This was the first port made by the French fleet, in December, 1715, with the Chevalier on board; and the prince embarked at the same place in the month of February of the following year.

The High street of Montrose is of great width, the houses are lofty, some of them having their gables (Flemish style) towards the street, which gives to the town an ancient aspect; but these are rapidly disappearing before the advancing improvements. Not only are the main streets strikingly clean, but the secondary ones are also neat and gas-lighted. About the centre of the High street is the Town House, a neat plain building of two storeys, with an arcade below. The South Esk is crossed by a magnificent suspension bridge, on the precise site of the former wooden one. The foundation stone of the masonry was laid in September, 1828, and the bridge declared open in 1829. It was designed by Captain Brown, R.N., patentee, and finished at an expense of upwards of £20,000. It stretches across the river in a noble span—the distance between the points of suspension being 432 feet, and, together with its approaches, the structure extends 800 feet. It forms a roadway of 26 feet in breadth, having a footpath on either side railed off. This structure is a great ornament to the town. Bridge street forms a very handsome approach to it. The river at the bridge is very deep, having 35 feet of water at spring tides and 20 feet at low water in ordinary tides; and so rapid that during the ebb it frequently runs at the rate of six miles an hour. The harbour, formed by the river and an arm of the sea, is very commodious, and a safe asylum for vessels in tempestuous weather. Two light-houses on the north bank of the South Esk guide the mariner to the entrance of the river; while a magnificent tower, called the Scurdyness, on the rock at the south entrance, is a welcome addition to the sea-lights on the east coast. These are most valuable improvements, as they enable ships to enter the port in the darkest of nights. A larger house, in which the keeper of the house resides, is provided with accommodation for the reception and recovery of persons who have suffered shipwreck; and attached to their praiseworthy establishment is a life-boat. The quays, which are all on the Montrose side of the river, are very judiciously planned, and have lately been considerably extended in the most substantial manner. There is a custom house at the port, but on account of recent changes in this department, it is now only a branch under the Dundee district. There is also a wet dock and patent slip. Two railway companies run into Montrose, having their own goods and passenger depôts, viz.—the Caledonian and North British. The shipping trade includes flax, corn, timber, coal, and cured fish. The principal manufactures of Montrose comprise flax spinning, linen yarns, sheetings, and sail cloth, but there are various other branches of trading industry, among which may be enumerated rope and sail making and a starch manufactory. The extent of the wood trade at this port deserves special mention, as it is believed to be second only to that of Greenock. The building of wooden ships, which at one time was carried on very extensively, has now been entirely abandoned, not a single yard being in operation. There are seven branch banks and a savings bank—the latter with Government security. Several commodious inns afford the necessary accommodation to visitors, the principal being the Star and the Queen's. The Star Hotel has long been established, and in all respects affords excellent accommodation. The Queen's is also a good commercial and family hotel, centrally situated. The Downs or Links are situated between the town and the sea, and are the most extensive of any in Scotland, comprehending a circuit of several miles, finely formed by nature for the favourite and healthful Scottish game of golf and the popular game of cricket, both of which are much practised. The railway passing through the Links has a little curtailed their dimensions, but a large portion of the front Links has been tastefully laid out as public gardens with promenades, a bowling green, and fountains. Montrose has its assembly room and other places of amusement, and numerous institutions—charitable, educational, scientific and social. Two admirably conducted newspapers issue weekly from the Montrose press—the Review, Liberal, and the Standard, Conservative.

The erection of Montrose into a royal burgh has generally been referred to the year 1352, in the reign of David II., but there is good reason for believing that the first charter emanated from David I. The municipal government is vested in the provost, three magistrates, dean of guild, hospital master, treasurer, and eleven councillors. The town is protected by a body of police, under the superintendence of commissioners. A police court is held weekly in the court room, a justice of the peace court on the first Monday in every month, and a sheriff's court on the third Friday in the months of January, March, May, July, September, and November; the two last mentioned courts are for adjudicating small debt claims. The burgh is united with those of Forfar, Brechin, Arbroath, and Inverbervie, usually called the Montrose Burghs, in returning one member to Parliament; the present representative being John Shiress Will, Q.C., London. There are three volunteer corps in Montrose, viz., artillery, and the first and second companies of rifles. The parish church is a large building, measuring 98 ft. long by 65 ft. over walls. This church has two galleries, and is capable of holding 2,500 people; the steeple is lofty, surmounted by a towering spire, which can be seen at a considerable distance. In addition to the parish church proper, there is the neat quoad sacra, Melville parish church, three Free churches, three United Presbyterian churches, an English Episcopal and a Scotch Episcopal church. The public charities of Montrose are very numerous. Among these are the ancient Hospital Fund, under the guardianship of the town. The relief from this charity is distributed among about 141 persons, not paupers. The Royal Lunatic Asylum, incorporated by royal charter in 1810, now occupies a handsome building on an elevated site at Hillside, about a mile and a half from the town, and from which there is an extensive prospect of the surrounding country; an Infirmary and Dispensary, originally incorporated with the Lunatic Asylum, is still under charge of the directors of that institution; and Dorward's House of Refuge. All these occupy capacious and ornamental structures. There are also numerous mortifications, which afford assistance to the deserving and indigent poor of the town. The Academy, situated on the Links, is a handsome erection, surmounted by a neat dome; the establishment comprises a rector and six teachers in the various languages, writing and arithmetic, English grammar, &c. Many other educational establishments are supported; and the numerous societies, both religious and benevolent, maintained in the town are highly creditable to the munificence of the residents. Several libraries and reading rooms are supported, the principal being the one in a part of the Town House, reckoned to be the finest and most extensive this side the Firth of Forth. An interesting museum is maintained in a very tasteful building in Panmure place. The market is held on Friday, and great hiring fairs are held on the Friday after Whit-Sunday and Martinmas (old style) 26th May, and 22nd November. The parish of Montrose encloses an area of 4,134 acres. The population of the burgh in 1871 was 15,720, and in 1881, 16,245; increase during ten years, 525. On account of the great depression in local trade there has been a considerable exodus during the last five or six years.

CRAIG parish, six miles in length, and two and a half at its greatest breadth, bounded by Montrose on the north, on the east and south by the German Ocean and Lunan, occupying the peninsula corner of land between the sea and Montrose basin, is nine miles in circumference, and is filled by the tide at high water. The islet called INCH BRAYOCK or ROSSIE ISLAND, in the neck of water connecting the basin with the sea, belongs to the parish; and there are also within its limits the two fishing villages of USAN and FERRYDEN; the latter being one of the largest and wealthiest on the east coast of Scotland, with a population of 1,520, and owning boats and other fishing appliances to the extent of about £28,000; the people are a very hardy and industrious race, and the women perform manual labour with the greatest ease. The land is generally arable, and beneath the surface nature has deposited abundance of limestone. Acreage 4,371. Population in 1881, 2,589.

The parish of DUN, four miles in length and the same in breadth, bounded on the north by Stracathro and Logie-Pert, on the south by Maryton and Farnell, on the west by Brechin, and on the east by Montrose, lies between Montrose and Brechin, on the north bank of the South Esk. The land is generally fertile, and the surface for the most part level. In the parish is a small lake, called Dun's Dish. Near the Bridge of Dun railway station is a bridge of three arches, erected in the years 1785-7, which crosses the South Esk river, and is one of the strongest in Forfarshire. Acreage, 4,305. Population in 1881, 511.

MARYTON (or Marytoun) is a parish, its length from east to west being about a mile and a half, and from north to south about three miles, lying on the south side of the South Esk, and the west side of the basin of Montrose, bounded by Craig (parish before-mentioned), on the south east, by Farnell on the west, Montrose on the north, and by the sea and the parish of Lunan on the south. The land is arable and well-cultivated, and the parish derives considerable advantage from its proximity to the town of Montrose. Acreage of the parish, 3,562. Population in 1881, 389.

LOGIE-PERT, OR LOGIE MONTROSE, as it was formerly called, was annexed to the parish of Pert about the early part of 1600. It is situated about five and a half miles south-east from Montrose, extending five miles from east to west, and three miles from north to south; bounded on the north by the North Esk river, on the south by Dun, on the east by Montrose, and on the west by Stracathro. The parish church is situated in the centre of the parish, in which is the small village of CRAIGO, and the Caledonian railway has a station of its name here. Acreage, 5,739. Population in 1881, 995.

At DUBTON is the junction station for Montrose, on the Scottish North-Eastern section of the Caledonian railway.

HILLSIDE which forms a suburb and is in the parish of Montrose, about two miles therefrom, is tastefully laid out, and there are many very good houses occupied by retired and business people of Montrose. The North British railway has a station here, at which place is also the asylum previously mentioned.

NEWTYLE,

WITH THE PARISH OF KETTINS.

NEWTYLE is a parish and village—the latter situated on the road from Dundee to Meigle (in Perthshire), 11 miles N.W. from the former town, and somewhat above 2 s. from the latter. It is a station on the Dundee, Newtyle and Coupar-Angus section of the Caledonian Railway. There is also a branch line from Newtyle to Alyth Junction, and thence to Alyth. The neighbourhood is very pleasant and picturesque, and the village itself respectable. In the summer season it is a resort for visitors, especially from Dundee. It presents inducements to manufacturers from Dundee and other towns to establish works in this district, land being comparatively cheap and wages low; the locality of Newtyle is likewise considered most eligible as a depot for grain and other agricultural produce. The inhabitants of the village are occupied in agricultural pursuits. A church of the Establishment has been erected upon the site of the old one, at a cost of £3,000, and is capable of accommodating 600 worshippers. This is a handsome building in the Norman-Gothic style of architecture, with a tower 83 feet in height, containing a two-dial clock, presented by Captain D. C. Burman. The edifice was opened for public worship in 1872, Andrew Helton, Esq. of Perth, being the architect. There are also a Free church, a public school, and a public library in the village. The parish, which lies in the south-west part of the county, extends two miles in length by one and three-quarters in breadth, including a portion of the Sidlaw hills, from which the lands decline into the rich flat exposure of Strathmore. Near the village are the remains of the castle of Hatton, built by Lawrence, Lord Oliphant, in the year 1575; and contiguous to these ruins some vestiges are visible of the still more ancient castle of Balcraig. This parish, which embraces an area of 5,192 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 911; at the same period the village numbered 443.

KETTINS is a parish 4 miles S.W. from Newtyle, and 1½ S.E. from Coupar-Angus; a small portion of the parish is situated in Perthshire, the greater part being in the western district of Forfarshire, on the south side of the valley of Strathmore, and on the northern declivity of the Sidlaw hills. The length from east to west is 4 miles, and the breadth from north to south 3, inclusive of Bandirran, which is detached. It is delightfully situated on a little stream, which, after passing Coupar-Angus, falls into the Isla. The parish generally is tolerably fertile, and contains excellent sandstone, very durable for building purposes. The parish church, erected in 1768, anciently had six chapels dependent upon it. There is a public school in the village. The castle of Pitcur, a mile south of the church, and now in ruins, gives title to the ancient and honourable family of Hallyburton. The Caledonian railway passes through the parish, and has a station at ARDLER. Kettins parish encloses an area of 7,796 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 848.

TANNADICE,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ABERLEMNO AND OATHLAW.

TANNADICE is a parish situated nearly in the centre of the county, extending about twelve miles in length, and by four to eight in breadth, five and a half miles north from Forfar, its post town, and six miles west from Brechin, separating on the east and north east the parish of Tannadice from those of Careston, Fearn, and Navar, and the sides which contain the obtuse angle separating the parish on the S.E., S.W., and N.W. from the parishes of Aberlemno, Oathlaw, Kirriemuir, and Cortachy. Along the western border of the parish passes the South Esk river, and on the eastern side courses the Noran water; on the banks of these streams the water is finely enclosed, and exhibits a variety of romantic scenes. The village of Tannadice is pleasantly situated on the north bank of the river Esk, seven and a half miles west from Brechin. Acreage, 21,328. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,254.

ABERLEMNO parish lies on the banks of the South Esk, and about twelve miles from the sea coast; five miles E. from Forfar, its post town, and six miles W. from Brechin, bounded on the north by Tannadice and Careston, from which it is separated by the Esk; on the north-east and north by Brechin, on the south-east by Guthrie, and on the south and west by Rescobie. The land is undulating and fertile, and agriculture is pursued with spirit and success. There are several quarries in the parish, which give employment to many of the inhabitants, and from which are obtained good pavement stones and gray slates, large quantities being conveyed by railway from AULDBAR ROAD STATION, which is in this parish. Turin Hill, the highest elevation in the parish, is 800 feet above sea level. In the parish churchyard, which is about six miles south-west from Brechin, is an antique obelisk, covered with hieroglyphics, and also a little to the north of the parish church are three antique obelisks, two of which are also covered by hieroglyphics, which are supposed to have been erected to commemorate a signal victory obtained over the Danes near this place. Antiquarians, however, are not agreed as to the design for which they were erected. A little to the eastward of the church are the ruins of the Castle of Flemington, and about two miles north-east from the church are also the ruins of Melgund Castle, which is supposed to have been erected by Cardinal Beaton. The "vitrified Fort of Finhaven" is about a mile west from the parish church. Acreage, 8,914. Population in 1881, 993.

OATHLAW, or FINHAVEN, is a parish four miles north from Forfar, its post town, situated on the south bank of the South Esk. Its length from east to west is about six miles, and its greatest breadth about three miles; it is bounded on the north by Tannadice, and on the east by Aberlemno, on the south by Rescobie, and on the west by Kirriemuir. The hill of Finhaven, with its "vitrified fort," is about three miles from the parish church, and is about 500 feet above sea level. It has much attracted the attention of antiquarians of late, but the mode of its construction and the use for which it was designed and the era to which it belongs still remain a mystery. Situated about a mile and a half east of the church is the castle of Finhaven, now in ruins, once the residence of the Earl of Lindsay and Crawford. There are quarries of excellent freestone in the parish. Acreage, 5,274. Population in 1881, 440.

HADDINGTONSHIRE,

OR EAST LOTHIAN, lies in the south-eastern part o Scotland; bounded on the north by the Firth of Forth, on the east by that strait and also by the North Sea, on the south by Berwickshire, and on the west by Edinburghshire, or Mid-Lothian. From east to west it extends twenty-six miles; from north to south, at the middle, sixteen—at the east end it is not more than ten miles across, and at the west end about twelve; its surface presents an area of about two hundred and eighty square miles, or 179,142 statute acres. In extent this is the twenty-fourth, and in population the twenty-third of the counties of Scotland.

THE EARLY HISTORY of this county is so intimately connected with that of Edinburgh as to render unnecessary a lengthened recurrence to this subject. The Saxons denominated the whole country lying along the sea and the Forth Lothian; afterwards it was divided into three parts, called, from their relative situation to each other, East Lothian, Mid Lothian, and West Lothian. In 1020, this district, with other parts of the Lothians, was ceded to Malcolm II. In succeeding centuries the shire suffered the horrors of pillage and conflagration on all occasions of the armies of England being sent to invade the country, or to molest or punish the capital. In 1296, and again in 1650, the sanguinary battles of Dunbar were fought within the county; and in the critical year of 1745, it was the scene of the conflict at Prestonpans, since which period it has enjoyed almost uninterrupted repose and tranquillity.

SOIL AND SURFACE, PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—In point of soil, cultivation, and produce this county holds the first rank in Scotland; and in some of these respects, particularly the mode of husbandry, it will bear comparison with the most favoured districts in England. The greatest elevations in East Lothian above the level of the sea are Traprain Law, 700 feet; North Berwick Law, 940 feet; Soutra Hill, 1,230 feet; and Spartleton Hill, 1,615 feet. During the reigns of David I., Malcolm IV., and William the Lion, the acreage of this county was in the possession of only a few barons, who at their pleasure disposed of not only the lands but the men who lived upon them without hindrance. In these times the kings, the nobles, and the churchmen were all tillers of the soil; and in this district every manor had its hamlet, its church, its mill, its kiln, and its brewhouse. The monks, indeed, were indefatigable husbandmen, and by their labour and skill gave the county its first character for agriculture. In this point of view, it may be divided into four districts. The first is a sloping tract of land, with a fertile soil. The second is a ridge of ground north of the Tyne, descending partly towards that river and partly towards the coast land, and comprehends a great proportion of the arable land of the county. The third consists of a tract varying in breadth, elevated above the midlands, and continuing along the base of the mountains nearly the whole extent of the county. The fourth comprises an extensive range of mountains which commences at the south-west extremity of the shire, and terminates in a high promontory called St. Abb's Head; the greater part of this is moor, but some spots between the hills are kept under a regular rotation of crops. Having near two sides begirt by the sea, the county derives a great part of its beauty and opulence from this circumstance. So commodious has nature disposed the surface of East Lothian into ranges of hills and fertile dales, that some tourists, from topographical retrospection, have declared Haddingtonshire to be the Northampton of Great Britain. Excellent gardens and orchards flourished in this county as early as the twelfth century; and pulse seems to have been cultivated here in the thirteenth—the latter circumstance is attested by the fact of the English soldiers, during their siege of Dirleton Castle, having subsisted on the peas which grew in the adjacent fields. The thriving state of the agriculture of this county in the fourteenth century is noticed by Fordun. He says, in 1386, East Lothian was embroiled in warfare, and its field operations impeded by the outrage committed by Alan of Wyntown, in carrying off by violence one of the daughters of the Earl of Seton; and, he adds, that so great was the ferment upon this occasion, that the labour of a hundred ploughs was suspended during a whole year. The fertility of East Lothian in the seventeenth century is ascertained by a passage in "Whitelock's Memoirs," where it is stated that the soldiers who accompanied Cromwell in his expedition into Scotland in 1650, were astonished to find in that district "the greatest plenty of corn they ever saw, not one of the fields being fallow." But it is since the period of the Union that in this district particularly agricultural improvements have manifested themselves extensively and beneficially, and called forth the exertions and science of spirited individuals, proprietors of the soil. They have introduced the best systems of husbandry and employed the most approved implements and machines—have drained, planted, and enclosed, until East Lothian has become one of the most beautiful and productive shires in North Britain. The manufactures of this county are unimportant, and are carried on but to a limited extent. There are two woollen mills in the neighbourhood of the county town, whilst in other parts of the shire are brick and tile works, agricultural implement works and breweries. Salt is manufactured in the vicinity of Prestonpans, coal also being extensively wrought here and at Tranent, Ormiston, and Pencaitland. So long ago as 1200, it is said, the monks of Newbattle worked a seam of this mineral at Prestongrange. Limestone is common over the county, and clay, ironstone, and sandstone are also found. The climate in the Lowlands is on the whole genial and favourable for agriculture, whilst in the Lammermoor district it is colder and more liable to falls of rain and snow.

RIVERS, &c.—Several streams intersect the county, but none of them merit the title of river except the Tyne, which, passing Haddington, falls into the sea at Tynninghame, where it forms a bay. The shire is destitute of natural lakes, but this deficiency seems no way injurious to the district, and is amply made up by the Firth of Forth, which yields a large supply of fish. The North British Railway passes through the county, and possesses stations in all the principal towns; there are also one or two branches diverging from it.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Haddingtonshire comprises twenty-three complete parishes and two parts of parishes, and three royal burghs—Haddington, Dunbar, and North Berwick; these, with Lauder (in Berwickshire) and Jedburgh (in Roxburghshire) formerly joined in sending one member to Parliament, but on the passing of the Redistribution of Seats Bill (1885) were included in their respective shires. The county at large returns one representative, the gentleman at present sitting being Richard Burdon Haldane, Esq. The parliamentary constituency for 1888-89 numbers 6,078. The Lord-lieutenant of the county is the Earl of Haddington. According to the census returns for 1871, the entire county contained a population of 18,076 males, and 19,695 females; total, 37,771; in 1881 the numbers were: males, 18,806; females, 19,696; total, 38,502; showing an increase in the ten years of 731. The valuation of the county for 1888-89 is £246,215; railways, £18,511.

ABERLADY AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

THE parish of ABERLADY lies S.E. of the south coast of the mouth of the Firth of Forth; it is very fertile, and contains an area of six square miles. It is bounded on the south by Gladsmuir and Haddington, and on the east also by the latter parish and Dirleton. The beach here presents such facilities for the disembarkation of an invading force, that in the course of the war when Britain was menaced with an invasion by France, serious apprehensions were entertained by all the southern districts of Scotland that the enterprising Bonaparte might have thought proper to select it as one of the chief points of attack, in order to divide the operations of the British. The village is situated 15 miles W. from Edinburgh, 5½ W.N.W. from Haddington, and 4½ S. from Dirleton, at the head of a long, flat, sandy beach, and at the mouth of the small river Peffer. James VI., by charter, erected this parish into a temporal barony, which grant, it is said, was confirmed by Charles I. in 1663, but the privileges, or immunities conferred thereby are not manifest at the present day. The Earl of Wemyss and March is patron of the parish. The seat of this nobleman, Gosford House, stands nearly a mile south-west of the village. The edifice, which is surrounded by beautiful enclosed grounds, contains a valuable collection of rare paintings, which are shewn in a liberal and courteous manner to visitors. About half a mile from Aberlady, on the north-east, is Luffness House, a mansion belonging to H. W. Hope, Esq., built in 1549, as a fortification, by the French general De Thermes, for the purpose of aweing the garrison of Haddington, then in the possession of the English. The parish church is a neat structure, and the Board school a well-conducted institution. Acreage, 4,319. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,000; and of the village, 438.

ATHELSTANEFORD AND DREM.

ATHELSTANEFORD parish lies on the north-east boundary of Haddington, and is separated on the north by Dirleton from the mouth of Forth; the small village lies within five and a half miles S.E. from North Berwick, five S.E. from Aberlady, and three N.E. from Haddington. DREM, two and a half miles distant, is a station on the North British line. It contains a neat and modern church and a Board school. The parish possesses considerable interest from the circumstance of having as ministers successively, in the early part of the last century, two men of eminent poetical genius—Blair, author of "The Grave," and Home, author of "Douglas," to whose memory the inhabitants, assisted by the subscriptions of others, erected a handsome monument in the centre of the village. The manse occupied by the first mentioned stood opposite the present modern manse, near the west end of the churchyard. The site is now comprised in the minister's garden, where an apple tree is pointed out as having stood close to the window of the poet's study. On the author of "Douglas" leaving his pastoral charge, which he did from disgust at the proceedings instituted against him by the presbytery and kirk in general, for the publication of so secular a work, he built and retired to an elegant mansion in the neighbourhood, still exhibited as a pattern of his taste. DREM is a village in this parish, the acreage of which is 5,077. Population in 1881, 762.

DIRLETON,

WITH GULLANE, FENTON, KINGSTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DIRLETON, one of the neatest rural villages in this county, and perhaps in Scotland, is 26 miles E.N.E. from Edinburgh, 7 N. from Haddington, 4¼ N.E. from Aberlady, and nearly 3 W. from North Berwick, charmingly seated at the head of a low meadow, extending about a mile and a half towards the sea. The houses, which for the most part are built in a plain, neat Gothic style, have tastefully arranged gardens, nearly surrounding an extensive triangular green, interspersed with trees. On the south side of this space stands the venerable and magnificent ruin of Dirleton Castle, embosomed among evergreens, and its massive towers richly clothed with ivy. The origin of this castle is lost in the darkness of the middle ages. It is ascertained, however, to have belonged to a noble family in the ninth century, named De Vallebus or De Vaux, from whom it was taken, after a tedious siege, by Edward I. in 1298. In 1650 it was reduced and dismantled by the parliamentary general Lambert. About the middle of the 15th century this castle and the estate bestowed the title of the Earl of Dirleton on the Halyburton family. From ancient documents it would appear that a collegiate church was founded here in 1444, by Sir Walter Halyburton, but little is known of its character or site. The present parish church, which stands a little below the green, is a neat erection, bearing date 1661, and considerably enlarged in 1825; it has a substantial square tower. In 1854 a new Gothic open roof was constructed and the whole woodwork stained and varnished, adding much to its beauty. The parish school stands near the church. The parish, which extends about six miles in length by four and a half in breadth, and embraces 9,146 acres, is low, and with the exception of a sandy strip along the shore, which is used as a rabbit warren, is fertile to a degree, and not surpassed by any district in East Lothian, yielding excellent green crops and pasture. Besides Dirleton, the parish contains three other villages, namely, GULLANE, FENTON, and KINGSTON. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,506, and of the village 403.

GULLANE is a small but respectable village, of rather ancient aspect, 2 miles S.W. from Dirleton. At one time this was the capital of the parish to which it gave its name; but in 1612 the seat of worship was removed by Act of Parliament to Dirleton, at the same time changing the name of the parish to its present appellation. On the east side of the Links stand the ruins of the ancient kirk, which was dedicated to St. Andrew, and was well endowed. On the small bleak island of Fidra, lying off this coast, was an ecclesiastical structure, which served the purpose of a lazaretto in times of severe plague, and its windows acted as beacons to the mariner at night, in warning him of the dangers of an unsafe shore. The Links in the vicinity of Gullane are the habitations of vast numbers of rabbits, and are farmed as a warren at a considerable rent; the markets of Newcastle and Leeds are supplied with great quantities annually from the burrows here. The downs of this neighbourhood were at one time celebrated for rearing and training race or fine riding horses. Within the last few years the Links of Gullane have become a favourite resort of the lovers of the ancient game of golf, and it is also rising into importance as a resort for summer visitors.

DUNBAR,

WITH BELHAVEN, EAST BARNS, WEST BARNS, SPOTT, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNBAR is a royal burgh and seaport, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of its parish and of the eastern part of the district of East Lothian; 28 miles E. from Edinburgh, 11 E. from Haddington, and 30 N.N.W. from Berwick-upon-Tweed; occupying a slightly elevated piece of ground on the shore of the North Sea. The North British Railway passes on the south side of the town, where there is a station. Dunbar, at a very early period, was considered a place of strength and commercial importance; but there was no harbour of any size, until Oliver Cromwell, by a grant of £300, began or promoted the construction of one, which now forms the east pier of the present harbour. In 1829 it was improved by the addition of a good dry and graving dock; this, however, having become useless was filled up years ago, and large stores are now erected upon the site. About 1842, a new harbour, called, by permission of her Majesty, Victoria Harbour, was built at the joint expense of the town and Fishery Board, and was about 20 years after repaired and greatly extended. It occupies a space of about five acres, and affords ample accommodation to the vessels and boats frequenting Dunbar for fishing purposes. On the west side of the harbour, and within high water-mark, stand the venerable ruins of a castle which in former ages must have been very considerable; it is based upon rocks, but the date of its erection cannot be conjectured. It was always considered a place of great defensive consequence, as a key to Scotland on the east border; and it has often been besieged and as often bravely defended. In this castle Edward II. took refuge after his defeat at Bannockburn; and to this secure asylum Bothwell fled, and left the unfortunate Mary in the hands of the associated lords after the disastrous rencontre at Carbery Hill. Its successful defence, for over four months, in 1337 by Black Agnes, Countess of Dunbar (wife of Earl Patrick), against the English, under the Earl of Salisbury, is one of the most memorable events in Scottish history. Subsequently it was demolished by order of the Scottish Parliament, and nothing but dilapidated fragments of this once almost impregnable fortress are now visible, and these have been much reduced by the excavations for Victoria harbour. On a columnar rocky projection, betweens these ruins and the harbour, was the battery; this has been abandoned by Government, and it is now used as a hospital for fever patients.

The town is built upon a gentle rise from the beach; the principal street is wide and spacious. The gas works are in the hands of the Corporation; and a good supply of soft water is conveyed to the town, from a distance of two miles, by means of pipes. In High street is a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and also one of the Bank of Scotland, and in Westport is one of the British Linen Company Bank. On a prominent site at the south end is a handsome place of worship in connection with the Free Church of Scotland. There are several public halls in the town, among which is one at the south end called St. Catherine's Hall. The opening of the hall was celebrated by a torchlight procession of the Freemasons, Free Gardeners, and Templars, on the 5th January, 1872. There is a spacious room, fitted either for balls or concerts; also three large rooms held respectively by the Freemasons, Free Gardeners, and Templars, as lodge rooms. The accommodation in every respect is excellent. The houses are generally large, and of pleasing exterior, and few towns present to the stranger a more agreeable and respectable appearance. Dunbar House, formerly the mansion of the Earl of Lauderdale, stands at the northern end of the main street; its grand front faces the sea, and consists of two extensive wings, with a circular centre, forming an elegant elevated portico, supported by corresponding pillars. On the top of the centre, at the back of the edifice, and facing the street, is a finely executed and large proportioned figure of that ideal animal the sphynx, in a couchant position, with wings erect; the house is now used as a barracks for the Second Brigade (Scottish Division), Royal Artillery. The herring fishery has long been a very considerable source of wealth to Dunbar. Frequently three hundred boats are at the station, and, since the opening of the railway, large quantities are sent, in a green state, to the inland counties—sometimes to the extent of from two hundred to three hundred tons a day. A small number are also cured into white or red herrings. Cod fishing is likewise a profitable pursuit here; the produce is mostly despatched to meet the London demand; while Edinburgh and Glasgow are also markets for white fish, lobsters, &c. from this port. The district around Dunbar is one of the richest and best cultivated in Scotland, and produces a much greater supply than is required by the inhabitants. The chief exports are corn, fish, and potatoes, and the imports coal and timber. The manufactures of Dunbar were at one period numerous and extensive; but the most important branch now in operation is fish curing, comprising several extensive concerns. The domestic trade furnishes all the necessary articles of life, and the shops exhibit a respectable display of useful and fashionable productions. Dunbar was elevated to the rank of a royal burgh by David II., and its burghal privileges were confirmed and extended by James IV and James VI. It was governed by a provost and three bailies, a treasurer, town clerk, and chamberlain, with fifteen members of council. An Act of Parliament for reducing the number of the municipal corporations in Scotland, has now limited the number of corporate officers in Dunbar to a provost, three bailies, a treasurer, and seven councillors.

At the southern end of the High street stands the elegant parish church, which was erected on the site of the old kirk in 1819–21. Its architectural style is the modern Gothic, and the body of the edifice is very commodious, containing eighteen hundred sittings. A handsome square tower, with a pinnacle at each corner, embellishes the structure. The entire building is of a rather dark red stone, not unlike brick when seen at a distance, but the quality of the material is considered of superior excellence and durability; the completion of the fabric cost upwards of £8,000. The interior is enriched with a beautiful marble monument to the memory of George Home, lord high treasurer of Scotland in the reign of James VI. The height of this fine memorial is twenty-six feet, and its breadth twelve. While the church was re-building, the most judicious care was taken not to injure or disturb what is deemed the finest piece of tomb sculpture in Scotland. The United Presbyterians have a place of worship here, as have also the Free Church, the Episcopalians, the Roman Catholics, the Wesleyan Methodists, and the Baptists. The town has the advantage of good Board schools, wherein all the useful branches of education are taught. A commodious building was erected in 1878 (on the beach, near the church), consisting of two wings, with a house for the master in the centre. The eastern wing forms the burgh school, the western wing, called the Lamer Street school, being designed for primary education, under a separate master. Other institutions belonging to the burgh and parish of a praiseworthy nature are well sustained. The country about Dunbar is exceedingly pleasant, and the prospects from the high grounds, which rise gradually from the sea coast, are expansive, and present a variety of delightful objects; the most striking of these are the North Berwick Law and Tantallon Castle, the Bass, the Isle of May, the Firth of Forth, and the mountains of Angus. The parish of Dunbar extends about eight miles along the coast, and embraces an area of 7,497 statute acres. The soil is rich and dry, and produces all kinds of crops, as early as any in Scotland. The market is held on Tuesday. There are two annual fairs—one on the first Tuesday after the 26th of May, the other on the first Tuesday after the 22nd of November. The entire parish contained in 1881 a population of 5,396, of which number 3,661 were given for the town, including that portion comprised in Belhaven, for which 427 were returned.

BELHAVEN is a remarkably neat village, included within the jurisdiction of the burgh of Dunbar, situated about a mile west from that town, at the head of a small bay of the sea, which in former times formed a good harbour. It gives the title of lord to a branch of the family of Hamilton. At a short distance from the village are the remains of an ancient British cemetery. In the village is a church in connection with the Church of Scotland. Between Belhaven and West Barns are the Seafield Brick and Tile Works; a large quantity of drainage tiles are manufactured here, and on account of their superior quality find a ready market, not only in this district, but are also sent by rail to the extremity of Berwickshire, and shipped extensively to the northern ports of Scotland. Population returned with Dunbar.

EAST BARNS is a village in Dunbar parish, about three miles south-east from that town, and a little to the right of the road leading thence to Berwick. In this village there is a school for the eastern district of the parish.

WEST BARNS, another part of the royalty of Dunbar, is about half a mile from Belhaven. In this village, on the river Biel, are extensive corn and flour mills; there is also a manufactory for agricultural implements, and the extensive paper mills of Annandale & Son, Limited. Here also is the landward Board school of Dunbar an excellently conducted and numerously attended institution Population of the village in 1881, 529.

SPOTT is a small rural village in the parish of that name, situated two miles south from Dunbar. The parish is of an irregular figure, being about five miles in length by two in breadth, and includes an acreage of 7,583. The low country is well enclosed and cultivated and the higher grounds afford good pasture. Spott House, in this parish, is romantically perched upon a rock, rising from a low glen, and surrounded with beautiful pleasure grounds. In this neighbourhood was fought on the 3rd of September, 1650, the battle of Dunbar, so decisively unfortunate to the royal cause, in which the Scotch forces, under General Leslie, were totally routed by Cromwell. The parish contained in 1881 a population of 579.

EAST LINTON IN PRESTONKIRK,

GARVALD AND BARO, STENTON, WHITEKIRK AND TYNNINGHAME, AND WHITTINGHAME.

EAST LINTON is a village in the parish of Prestonkirk, and a burgh by the adoption of the Police (Scotland) Act, 1862, 22 miles E. from Edinburgh, 6 S.S.E. from North Berwick, 6 W. from Dunbar, and 5 E. from Haddington, eligibly situated on the left bank of the Tyne. The parish church, built in 1770, is at PRESTON, about a quarter of a mile north-east from East Linton; in the latter are a United Presbyterian church, a Free church, and a public school. The tower of the Free church has been adorned this year (1888) with an illuminated clock, proving very useful to the inhabitants. The parish of Prestonkirk measures about four miles each way, and comprises 7,058 acres; the surface is agreeably varied, and the soil fertile and well cultivated. The North British line passes through the village, and has a station here. There is a handsome and commodious Combination Poorhouse. About a mile south-west of Linton are the ruins of Hailes Castle, noted as having been one of the residences of Mary and Bothwell; and one mile north of the village is the elegant mansion of Smeaton. From the southern part of the parish rises the hill of Traprain Law to the height of seven hundred feet above the level of the sea. A market or meeting is held at East Linton every Monday during the harvest season for hiring reapers, and an important cattle market is held here annually in October, and every other Monday. In 1881 the parish of Prestonkirk contained a population of 1,929.

GARVALD and BARO, a united parish, is bounded by Morham and Whittinghame on the north and east, and by Gifford on the west, extending from near the centre of the county southward, among the Lammermoor hills, to the borders of the Berwickshire. Within the parish are fine arable lands and also sheep walks; and the district contains a number of remains of antiquity. Among the latter are the ruins of Nunraw, a nunnery once of great importance, now the residence and property of Walter Wingate Gray, Esq. The village of Garvald, a nice, sequestered rural little place, is seated in a fertile valley on the banks of the small river Papana, which a little lower is called Biel water, 22 miles E.S.E. from Edinburgh, 8½ S.W. from Dunbar, 5 S. from Linton, and nearly 6 S.E. from Haddington. Acreage, 13,442. Population of the parish in 1881 was 758, and of the village, 395.

STENTON is a parish and small village, the latter situated 4¼ miles east from East Linton. The principal object of attraction in the parish is a beautiful artificial serpentine piece of water about a mile south of the village; it is nearly two miles in length, and averages about 400 yards in breadth, though in some places it is double the latter proportion, and in others much narrower. Its course is so sinuous that the stranger can form no just idea of its length; its banks are high, steep and well clothed with wood, and the scenery throughout the meanderings of the lake is of a delightful and picturesque character. By the kindness of the proprietress, Miss Constance Nisbett Hamilton, of Archerfields, Winton and Biel, parties are allowed to ramble through the grounds and plantations, or make excursions upon the lake, the accommodation of boats for the purpose being provided. In 1881 the parish contained a population of 608; it comprises an acreage of 7,676.

WHITEKIRK is a very small village, in the united parish of Whitekirk and Tynninghame, four miles north from Linton; it consists of but a few humble dwellings, the ancient parish church and manse, and a public school.

Two miles from Linton and the same from Whitekirk is TYNNINGHAME village, also inconsiderable both in size and population. Tynninghame House, the elegant family seat of the Earl of Haddington, is half a mile from the village, enchantingly environed by woods and walks of superlative beauty, at the head of a park sloping gently southward to the Tyne, near its mouth. In 1881 Whitekirk and Tynninghame, the acreage of which is 6,195, contained a population of 1,051.

WHITTINGHAME is an extensive parish reaching from the borders of Berwickshire a length of eleven miles northward, and varying in breadth from six to four miles, and still narrower in the middle, comprising 15,595 acres. In the northern division of the parish are the beautiful pleasure grounds and plantations surrounding the fine mansion of Whittinghame, the seat of the Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, M.P. The grounds are open to the public under certain restrictions. The village, a very small one, is three miles south from the village of Linton, and six east from Haddington. In 1881 this parish had a population of 639.

FALA AND SOUTRA, WITH HUMBIE AND BLACKSHIELS.

FALA and SOUTRA is a united parish, the first of which is within the eastern border of Edinburghshire, the other in the county of Haddington. The villages of Fala and Fala-dam are situated on the road from Edinburgh to Lauder, about fourteen miles from the former, and eleven miles from Haddington. The parish comprehends part of the Lammermoor ridge, of which Soutra Hill is the north-west point. From the foot of the hill the surface is nearly level, having a tolerably fertile soil, and the lands are in a high state of cultivation. The kirk of Fala stands on an eminence overhanging the road. BLACKSHIELS is a small village in this parish, the acreage of which is 6,064, its population in 1881 being 312.

The parish of HUMBIE lies in the south-western part of Haddingtonshire; bounded by Salton and Ormiston on the north, part of Bolton and Gifford on the east, and Fala and Soutra on the west. It is five miles in length, by rather more than three in breadth, lying chiefly on the Lammermoor range of hills near Berwickshire. The high lands are pastoral, but the low grounds are well enclosed and cultivated. Ironstone and coal are said to lie under the surface of some parts, but neither has been wrought. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a parochial school are in the parish, which encloses an area of 9,316 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 907.

GIFFORD AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

GIFFORD is a respectable village, and the capital of the parish of Yester, 20 miles E.S.E. from Edinburgh, 9 S.E. from Tranent, and 4 S.E. from Haddington; charmingly situated on a rivulet, tributary to the Tyne. The village, which is well built, consists of two spacious streets of unequal length, one end of the longest being ornamented with a fine avenue of lofty trees, which extends for a mile in a southerly direction, and terminates at Yester House, the noble family mansion of the Marquis of Tweeddale, whose example and fostering influence has accomplished so much in advancing the agriculture of Scotland. The parish church stands at the eastern end of the shorter street, and what was formerly the parochial school at the north end of the longer one; this building is now used for lectures, &c., a new schoolhouse having been built at the east end of the village. The church, which was erected in 1708, contains a pulpit of oak of much greater antiquity than the building itself, called Knox's pulpit, so called from this celebrated preacher having been, it is said, born in Gifford, but which circumstance is denied by very creditable authorities, and the honour bestowed upon Haddington. The scenery around here is very picturesque. Fairs are held here on the first Tuesday in March, the third Tuesday in June, and the first Tuesday in October. The population of the parish of Yester, the acreage of which is 8,848, was in 1881, 924, of which Gifford contained 382.

HADDINGTON,

WITH THE PARISHES OF BOLTON AND MORHAM AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

HADDINGTON is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, the county town of East Lothian, and the capital of the parish of its name, 17 miles E. from Edinburgh, 38 N.W. from Berwick-upon-Tweed, 11 W. from Dunbar, and nine and a half S. from North Berwick; eligibly and pleasantly situated on the left bank of the river Tyne, and is the terminus of a branch line from the North British railway. Haddington is unquestionably of very ancient origin; for in a charter granted by Ada, the widow of Prince Henry (and mother of Malcolm IV. and William the Lion), dated 1178, she styled it Meum Burgum de Haddington. Much ingenuity has been exercised in trying to discover the derivation of the name of the town. The King's army rested here the night before the battle of Prestonpans; and a few years ago, in excavating a site for a tank, human bones, with those of horses, leather belting, and pieces of decayed iron, were found in considerable quantities. The suburb, called Nungate, derives its name from a nunnery founded by Ada, which stood about a quarter of a mile from the town. It was in this abbey or nunnery that a parliament was convened on the 7th of July, 1548, during the siege of Haddington, when consent was given to the marriage of the unfortunate Mary to the Dauphin of France, and to her being educated at that court. The street from the West Port to the Town House, now called Court street, was of old named "King street," no doubt from the King's palace being situated therein. It was here that Alexander II. first saw the light, having been born in the palace on the 24th of August, 1198. At the east end of Nungate street is seen the roofless ruin of St. Martin's Church, which has been but little used since the Reformation. The town has suffered severely at different periods by conflagrations and inundations. In 1216 it was burnt by King John, and in 1244 it shared the same fate by accident. In 1358 whole villages were swept away by the overflow of the Tyne, the waters of which approached the monastery, when, it is related by a monkish chronicle, "a nun seized the statute of the Virgin, and threatened to throw it into the flood unless she (Mary) protected her house from destruction," whereupon the waters gradually retired within their ordinary banks. The last great conflagration, which was accidental, occurred about 200 years ago, by the carelessness of a nursemaid. The 4th of October, 1775, is memorable for the rising of the Tyne, eight feet nine inches, at which it continued for several hours. A plate recording this occurrence is placed at the east corner of High street. Considering the great antiquity of this burgh, it may be justly styled handsome. The streets, which are spacious, are gas lighted by a company formed in 1835, whose works are erected at the west end of the town, in which quarter conspicuously stand the County Buildings, the architecture of which is of the old English style; they contain sheriff and justice of the peace court rooms, with appropriate offices, and jury and witness rooms. The erection of this building cost £5,470. The Town's Buildings, to which was added in 1831 a fine spire, 170 feet in height, at an expense of about £1,500, may be recognised as another feature of improvement to the burgh; they comprise the burgh council room, and assembly and public reading room. This pile, which has evidently been erected at different periods, forms the extreme western end of that long range of buildings separating the spacious High street from the equally wide Market-street. In the Corn Exchange, opened 29th September, 1854, is held on the Friday, one of the most animated grain markets in the kingdom. The County Lunatic Asylum (opened in 1866) stands a short distance from the town, and is a spacious edifice. The suburb of Nungate is approached across the Tyne by the Waterloo bridge, of one arch, built in 1817; as also by another bridge, ancient and narrow, of three small arches. The corporation of this burgh consists of a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and twelve councillors; they hold a court every Monday. A sheriff and commissary court sits every Thursday; one for small debts every alternate Thursday a justice of peace court the second Tuesday of each month; a quarter sessions is held on the first Tuesday in March, May, and August, and on the last Tuesday of October; and an adjourned quarter sessions on the second Thursday in January.

The trade of Haddington consists principally in corn; on the market days immense quantities are brought for sale, and it is considered one of the leading grain marts of Scotland. There are also agricultural implement and coach building works, one for the manufacture of sacking, two breweries, two ironfoundries, tanneries, two cloth mills, and two corn mills. Four banking establishments afford monetary accommodation—a branch of the British Linen Company, the Bank of Scotland, Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Royal Bank of Scotland. An agricultural society was instituted in Haddington long since, and another at Salton; they were united in 1819, and now form one of the most flourishing local associations in the kingdom, annually distributing in premiums nearly £300; the Marquis of Tweeddale is patron. Of late years the public have received the advantage of a free library, provided with books in all departments of literature; there is also a law and an excellent subscription library. The bowling green occupies the ground between Elm House and the Nungate bridge, and is interesting from the fact of its being the oldest in Scotland, having been used successively for 200 years.

The parish church is a venerable and capacious structure; from its architecture and some traditional records it is supposed to have been erected about the twelfth or thirteenth century. The west end is the only portion now used, in the repair and improvement of which nearly £6,000 was expended in 1811; the east end of the ancient monastery and the old square tower are now a ruin. In a corner of the edifice is the burial place of the Lauderdale family, who for many generations possessed Lethington, or "Lennox Love," at present the seat of the Right Hon. Lord Blantyre; and in the aisle there are many statues of the Lauderdale succession, large as life, reclining on beds of state. The designations of the other structures for divine worship, with their respective localities and ministers, are given in a subsequent page. The charitable institutions are numerous, and highly credible to the burgh, as are the educational departments; and several societies and clubs are established on the most respectable footing, for various laudable objects. Haddington lays claim to the honour of being the natal place of that unbending reformer, John Knox, and the house where it is contended he was born was not long since generally pointed out in Gifford gate; the village of Gifford, however, contests the claim. The Knox Institute, erected in 1878 in memory of John Knox, takes the place of the Burgh School. It is scheduled as one of the secondary or higher class schools of Scotland, and provides a first-class classical, mathematical, and English education for children of the district. It has accommodation for 400 pupils, and was erected at a cost of £7,000, £3,000 of which was contributed by persons friendly to the object. The weekly market is held on Friday; the sale of oats commences at twelve, barley at twenty minutes past twelve, beans and peas at a quarter to one, and wheat at one. A weekly auction for the sale of live stock is also held every Monday. A cattle fair is held in October, and the United East Lothian Agricultural Society hold their meetings here for the show of stock, implements, seed, &c.; for the show of seed corn in February and October, of stock in March and July, and roots and poultry in December. Population of the burgh in 1871, 4,007, and in 1881, 4,013.

BOLTON is a parish and village—the latter, a small one, is situated on the road from Haddington to Lauder, 3 miles S.W. from the former. About the close of the fifteenth century the lands of Bolton were wrongfully seized by the Hepburns, one of which infamous family, John Hepburn, was executed as the associate of the Earl of Bothwell, his chief in the murder of Darnley. The church and the public school are both in the village; the former is a substantial erection, in the modern Gothic style, ornamented with a square tower; the latter is a well built and judiciously conducted institution. Acreage, 3,106. Population in 1881, 337.

MORHAM, a small parish about 3 miles S.E. from Haddington, figured largely in the time of Queen Mary, whose third husband, James, Earl of Bothwell, was proprietor of Mainshill. At that time there was a comparatively large village, which has, however, long ago disappeared, and the parish is now wholly agricultural. The parish church is a plain stone building, and there is also a Board school and school house erected in 1875, at a cost of about £1,300. Acreage, 2,087. Population in 1881, 209.

INNERWICK AND OLDHAMSTOCKS.

THE parish of INNERWICK is bounded by Oldhamstocks on the east, Spott and Dunbar on the west, the sea on the north, and Cranshaws and Longformacus (in Berwickshire) on the south. It measures ten miles in length, by a breadth varying from two to three, and embraces an area of 13,157 statute acres. The land towards the sea coast is level, and very fertile; inland it rises into gently swelling hills, which are ornamented with a variety of plantations, and the fields are all well enclosed. The village of Innerwick is 30 miles E. from Edinburgh, 14 E. from Haddington, and 4 S.E. from Dunbar, lying rather more than a mile to the west of the road leading from the latter town to Berwick. The Established church, which was built in 1781, is a neat edifice, and stands on a judiciously selected site, close by the village. In 1870 the interior of this church was thoroughly renovated; galleries were taken down, the whole of it reseated, a new pulpit erected, and the wood work stained and varnished. The cost of the alterations was £400. At the same time a stained glass window was erected, at a cost of £65, to the memory of the late Rev. James Smellie, late minister of the parish. A Board school was built in 1860, and enlarged in 1876. There is also a Free church, situated about half a mile from the village. About a mile west of the latter edifice is the modern and handsome mansion of Mr. Richard Hunter, of Thurston; and about three-quarters of a mile to the south-east of Innerwick are the remains of the castle of that name. The situation of the ruins is rather secluded; they stand on the summit of a rocky eminence, overhanging a woody glen, which divides the castle from the fortlet of Thornton. The castle, which originally belonged to the Hamiltons of Innerwick, was besieged, taken, and destroyed, after an obstinate resistance by the troops under the Duke of Somerset. There are likewise the remains of several military encampments in the neighbourhood. Population of the parish in 1881, 777.

OLDHAMSTOCKS parish (a portion of which is in the county of Berwick) is between seven and eight miles in length, by a breadth of about two, and includes an area of 8,837 statute acres. The parish of Innerwick bounds it on the north-west, west, and part of the south, and Cockburnspath lies on its east. The land is fertile on the sea coast, and rises gradually towards the Lammermoor Hills, which are chiefly pastoral. The village is situate three miles south-east from Innerwick, in a valley on the road from Dunbar to Duns. Dunglass, the elegant modern mansion of Sir Basil Hall, Bart., ornaments that part of the parish near the coast. Dunglass Castle is occasionally noticed in Scottish history; it was originally one of the many strongholds of the Earls of Home, and still gives its title to Lord Dunglass. In 1640 the Earl of Haddington, and several others who had joined the covenanters, took possession of Dunglass Castle, for the purpose of watching the garrison of Berwick. While here the Earl received a letter from General Leslie, and was standing in the court yard reading it to the company there assembled, when the powder magazine blew up, which, throwing down one of the side walls, overwhelmed his lordship, together with his auditors, who all perished in the ruins. The deed is said to have been perpetrated by one of the Earl's faithless attendants, who ignited a barrel of gunpowder with a hot iron. Population of the parish in 1881, 568.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY, ON THE NORTH BRITISH LINE.

Station, one mile to the east of INNERWICK—John Douglas, station master

NORTH BERWICK AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

NORTH BERWICK is a parish containing a royal burgh and seaport, 23 miles, N.E. from Edinburgh, 11 N.W. from Dunbar, and 10 N. from Haddington; situated on a low sandy plain on the shore of the German Ocean, at the entrance of the Firth of Forth, and on a branch of the North British railway. It consists principally of one long main street, running east and west, another proceeding in a contrary direction towards the sea, and two or three small ones; and on the East and West Links are some houses of a superior kind. The chief trade of Berwick is the export of potatoes, &c.; the imports are coal and bones for manure. The harbour, which is small, is formed by a tolerably good pier; but, although there is water enough for a large class of vessels, the rocks render the entrance so difficult that but small ones make the attempt; these can ride here in perfect safety, the harbour being boomed. Fidra roads, about two miles to the west, are considered perfectly safe. In the offing are several bleak islets, only of value as rabbit warrens; and three miles to the east within two miles of the coast, is the Bass Rock, the terror of seamen. It is a mile in circumference, and rises 350 feet above the surface of the sea; the channel betwixt it and the land is very deep, and is frequently taken by steam vessels to and from London and Leith. The Bass is inaccessible on all sides, except by a narrow pass on the south-west, towards the land. A fearful caverned passage penetrates through the rock from east to west, which may be explored at low water. Commanding the landing place are the remains of a small fortification, which at one time was of considerable strength, and could then only be reached by ladders or a bucket and chains; it existed as a stronghold for a long period, was a state prison during the reign of the two Stuarts, and became distinguished in the early part of the reign of William III. for the persevering fortitude with which it held out against the new dynasty. The Bass is inhabited by myriads of sea fowl, especially Solan geese. Nearly opposite the Bass, and about three miles east of Berwick, are the interesting ruins of Tantallan Castle, referred to by Sir Walter Scott as the parting scene of Angus and Marmion, in his poem of "Marmion." About a quarter of a mile south-west are seen the extensive remains of an abbey, said to have been founded by David I. for a sisterhood of Cistercian nuns; and not far distant rises North Berwick Law, a conical hill, the summit of which is six hundred feet above the level of the sea.

The date of the first charter, erecting Berwick into a royal burgh, is unknown, that instrument having been lost or destroyed. James VI., however, granted to it a writ confirmatory of all its former privileges, by which it is governed by two bailies, a treasurer, and six councillors. The burgh joins with Haddington, Dunbar, Lauder, and Jedburgh in returning one member to Parliament. The Sheriff's Small Debt Courts are held the third Wednesday in January, and the second Wednesday in May, July and October, at eleven in the morning, and the Justice of Peace Courts when necessary. There are five churches and several good schools in the town. There are several first-class hotels here, the largest being the marine, a noble edifice, erected at a cost of £20,000; it is in the Scottish baronial style of architecture, and contains upwards of 100 apartments. The area of the parish is 5,067 acres, and its population in 1881 was 2,688, the parliamentary burgh having 1,698.

POST OFFICE, High Street, Peter Brodie, Post Master.—Letters arrive from England and all parts at 7 a.m., from Edinburgh and West of England at 8 30 and 10 45 a.m. and 8 p.m., from England, Scotland, and all parts at 6 30 p.m.; and are despatched to Edinburgh, Glasgow, South of Scotland and Drem at 8 45 and 11 a.m. to England, Ireland, foreign and all parts at 1 30 and 4 p.m., to England, Ireland, and all parts of Scotland at 6 20 p.m. On Sunday to all parts at 1 55 p.m.——Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

PRESTONPANS,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF PRESTON, COCKENZIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PRESTONPANS is a market and post town, and burgh of barony, 9 miles E. from Edinburgh, 14 S.W. from North Berwick, 9½ W.N.W. from Haddington, and 3 E. from Musselburgh; situated on the shore of the Firth of Forth; and the North British Railway passes about a half a mile to the south. The town consists principally of one long street running parallel with the Forth, without any public buildings worthy of particular notice. It is much frequented during the bathing season by visitors from Edinburgh and different parts of the country. The harbour is situated a little to the westward of the town, and is called Morison Haven; it has a quay for shipping coal and the manufactures of the place, which comprise earthenware, fire-bricks, and other articles made from fire-clay, common bricks, tiles and salt; the latter originated here at an early date, having been made by the monks in 1189. There is also an extensive brewery and the large works of Messrs. James Mellis & Co., whose soaps have obtained a well deserved reputation. Oysters are taken in the Forth, near the town, and considerable quantities are sent to the markets of Edinburgh, Newcastle, and even to London. The mines of coal are very rich in the neighbourhood; a seam of this valuable mineral is now being worked by the Prestongrange Coal and Fire brick Company, Limited, within two hundred yards of the quay at Morison Haven. The seam is eight to ten feet in thickness, beneath which it is ascertained there exist eight or nine other strata, making an aggregate body of workable coal of fully forty feet; the roof of this mine is composed of a stratum of fire-clay from two to three feet thick, and a band of ironstone of six inches in thickness. Prestonpans received its charter as a burgh of barony in 1617, in favour of Sir John Hamilton, of Preston, which ancient village (Preston) is included with the eastern part of the town in the charter; a suburb called "Kuittle," or more properly Cuthil, the western portion, also enjoys a charter, which was granted originally to the abbey of Newbattle; this division is possessed by Sir G. G. Suttie, who is also patron of the parish, which is one of the smallest in the county. The places of worship are the parish church and a Free church. A public school and some benefit societies are in the town; the principal charity, however, is Schaw's Hospital, at Preston village, an extensive building, erected in 1831, in the old English style of architecture, at an expense of nearly £3,000, out of the funds bequeathed by its benevolent founder, Dr. Schaw, in 1781. The institution was first opened in 1784, in Preston House, which stood behind the present erection; it was founded for the education and maintenance of twenty-one boys, children of indigent parents—those of the name of Schaw, M'Neil, Cunningham and Stewart having a preference of entry. This trust has been modified at the instance of the Endowed Schools Commissioners. Part of the fund is now devoted to giving free education to a large number of the children in the public school, and another part is spent in bursaries open to the public school children, in Haddingtonshire. The house is now occupied by Miss Mary Murray's Hospital—an establishment for the training of domestic servants. The principal seats in the neighbourhood are Preston Grange, Drummore, Northfield, and Preston Lodge. Preston Tower, in this vicinity, formerly the seat of the Hamiltons of Preston, is an attractive ruin. At the distance of a mile and a half from the town, at a hamlet called Meadow Mill, was fought the battle to which the name Prestonpans has been appended, on the 21st of September, 1745, between the adherents of the Stuart family and the English troops, under the command of General Cope, in which the latter were routed. In this engagement fell Colonel Gardiner, to whose memory a handsome monument has been erected. The house (Bankton House), once occupied by this revered officer, and in which he expired after the battle, stands a little to the west of Meadow Mill, and is still pointed out to the enquiring stranger. In the main street is a handsome monument to the memory of the late Thomas Alexander, C.B. director general of the medical department of the British army. The parish has an area of 1,291 acres, and its population in 1881 was 2,573.

COCKENZIE is a fishing village in the parish of Tranct, 1 mile E. from Prestonpans, situated on the road leading to North Berwick and the shore of the Firth of Forth. It has a small harbour, substantially constructed by Mr. Cadell, for shipping coal. A new harbour was opened in September, 1880, by Lord Elcho, at a cost of £11,000, mainly subscribed by the fishermen. A very handsome school and schoolmaster's house, the gift of a liberal donor, are situated in the village. A fair is held here on the first Thursday in November. Population in 1881, 1,612.

SALTON (EAST AND WEST), PENCAITLAND,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

SALTON parish lies chiefly in a fine fertile valley on the north side of the Lammermoor Hills; it is well enclosed and cultivated, and various parts of the district are embellished with thriving plantations. The village of EAST SALTON, a respectable one, is situated 15 miles E. from Edinburgh, 5 S.W. from Haddington, and the same distance S.E. from Tranent. The parish church, which stands in the village, was almost entirely rebuilt in 1805, in the modern Gothic style, and cruciform, having a fine spire ninety feet high. The celebrated Bishop Burnet had Salton for his first benefice, and for some years performed the duties of parish minister; and it was here that he used the only book of common prayer known to have existed in the Episcopal Church of Scotland during the reign of Charles II. This eminent churchman and historian bequeathed a valuable library to the parish, besides a considerable sum for educating, clothing, and apprenticing thirty poor children; the proceeds of the bequests amount now to about £96 per annum. The small river Salton and the Tyne are boundary streams of the parish, which has abundance of excellent lime. WEST SALTON, in the same parish, is about half a mile from East Salton; between the two villages is Salton Hall, an elegant mansion, the residence of John Fletcher, Esq. In the village is a good school house, erected in 1803, where the children admitted under Bishop Burnet's charity are instructed. The population of the parish, which embraces an area of 3,812 statute acres, was in 1881, 575.

PENCAITLAND is a rural village and parish; the former is situated two miles and a half N.W. from East Salton, the latter being divided into two nearly equal parts by the river Tyne. This district forms the eastmost limit of the great coal range of the Lothians. The coal here is of excellent quality, lying about fifty-six yards deep, in a nearly horizontal stratum of two feet nine inches thick; an inferior coal is, however, obtained at only sixteen yards below the surface. Besides coal, the parish abounds in good limestone and freestone; there is also a substantially-built school, which was enlarged in 1887 at the cost of about £1,300, and an ancient cross. About half a mile to the north-west is Winton Castle, an extensive pile, partly ancient and partly modern, formerly the residence of the Earls of Winton, previous to the attainder of the Seaton family in 1715. It is now the property of Miss Constance Nisbet Hamilton, of Archerfield and Biel. Fountain Hall, the seat of Sir Thomas North Dick Lauder, Bart., and Tyneholm House, are also handsome mansions in this parish. On the eastern side of the river, which is crossed by an old stone bridge, stands the parish church. The population of the parish, the area of which is 5,075 statute acres, was in 1881, 1,107.

TRANENT,

GLADSMUIR, WITH PENSTON, ORMISTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

TRANENT, a town and post village in the parish of that name, is 10 miles E. from Edinburgh, 18 W. from Dunbar, and 7 W. from Haddington; situated on the main road from the latter town to the Scottish metropolis, at the head of elevated ground; the North British railway passes about a mile to the north. The town consists of a street running from the west to east along the line of the public road, with another diverging from about the middle of it. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in the adjacent collieries, which have been wrought in this quarter from the very first discovery of coal in Scotland, whilst others are occupied in agriculture. A branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland is established in the town. The church, which stands at the foot of the town, is a plain edifice with a square tower; Colonel Gardiner, who fell in the battle of Prestonpans, was interred in it. There are also a Free church erected in 1814, a United Presbyterian church, built in 1826, and handsome public schools. A new Town Hall, for public entertainments, &c., was built in 1888 at a cost of £1,000. Near the southern boundary of the parish is Elphinstone Tower, once a baronial residence; and in other parts of the parish are the ruins of Waterfallside Castle, Seton Castle, and the remains of a once collegiate church. ELPHINSTONE is a small village in this parish, 2 miles S. from Tranent. Acreage of the parish, 5,919. Population in 1881, 5,198, of which the village contained 2,235.

GLADSMUIR is a beautiful arable parish, rising in a gentle acclivity from the south shore of the Firth of Forth. The parish church and school stand on the main road between Haddington and Tranent nearly 4 miles W. from the former town and 3 E. from the latter. The district abounds in coal, and several pits are wrought at PENSTON, which is the principal village in the parish, and chiefly inhabited by colliers. George Heriot, the founder of the hospital at Edinburgh, is said to have been a native of this parish, and Dr. Robinson was its clergyman, while engaged in writing the "History of Scotland." From the proximity of the hamlet of Gladsmuir to the scene of the battle of Prestonpans, that conflict was called by the Jacobite party "the battle of Gladsmuir." The population of the parish, the acreage of which is 7,043, was in 1881, 1,747.

The parish of ORMISTON lies in the western part of the county; it is chiefly level, under the best state of cultivation, and well enclosed and planted. The village is situated in the northern part of the parish, at the distance of 2½ miles S. of Tranent, and consists of one spacious street, with a cross in the centre. A monument to the memory of the late Dr. Moffat, missionary to South Africa, has been erected in this his native village, at a cost of upwards of £200, which was raised by public subscription. The parish church stands a mile and a half to the south-west, and Ormiston Hall one mile south of the village. One mile further, on the summit of an ancient eminence called Dodridge Law, are traces of a Danish camp. Acreage of the parish 3,444. Population in 1881, 1,026.

INVERNESS-SHIRE.

THIS is a very extensive county, being the first in Scotland in magnitude, though only ranking the tenth in population. It is bounded on the north by the counties of Ross and Cromarty; on the east by those of Nairn and Moray—the Firth of the latter also touching it on this quarter; on the south are the shires of Perth and Argyle, with a small part of Aberdeen; and the Atlantic Ocean washes its western boundary; a small insulated district between the shires of Banff and Moray belongs to it, and several of the Hebrides are politically attached to it. The county (excluding the isles) extends in length, from the point of Airsaig on the west to that of Ardersier on the east, about ninety-two miles, and its greatest breadth is over fifty miles. The whole surface comprises 4,054 square miles of land, and 192 of lakes. Taking the computed number of acres at 3,000,000, little more than one-tenth is cultivated. The shire comprehends a variety of districts of local importance—as Badenoch in its south part, Lochaber on the south-west, Moidart on the west, Glenelg on the north-west, Glengany in its central part, and others of less consequence, as Glengary, Glenmorison, Glenshiel, &c. The islands annexed to the county are Skye, Harris, North and South Uist, Benbecula, Barra, Eigg, Muck, Rum, and Canna; besides a number of islets.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &C.—The greater part of the surface of this county consists of lofty mountains, which, especially towards the west, tower above each other in stupendous magnificence. It would be vain to attempt a particular description of the scenery to be met with in this great county, comprehending, as already mentioned, so many mountains, between all of which are deep glens of boundless variety and beauty, each having its stream and its lake, and many shrouded in woods. One of the mountains is, nevertheless, too conspicuous to pass over in silence—the noble and celebrated Ben Nevis, the highest elevation in Great Britain, soaring to the height of 4,406 feet above the level of Loch Linnhe. This remarkable eminence stands to the north-east of Fort William, near the shore of an arm of the sea. From the top, in clear weather, a view can be obtained across nearly the whole of the north of Scotland, from sea to sea; it is generally enveloped, however, in a mantle of clouds, and is toilsome in the ascent. It consists principally of a fine brown porphyry, and contains red granite of a most beautiful grain; it is said also to possess veins of silver and lead. Being cleft in many places to the very base, by ravines and glens, its precipices are of prodigious altitude; one of them, the inaccessible eyrie of eagles, is nearly 500 feet perpendicular; and in the fissures, even in the warmest weather, snow remains unmelted. Around its southern base flows the Nevis streamlet, through the glen of that name; it was at the opening of this valley that the Marquis of Montrose achieved the brilliant victory of Inverlochy. On the summit is an Observatory, erected by the Scottish Meteorological Society, and about a hundred yards to the south of this is a new hotel, which was opened in July, 1885. The other remarkable eminences are Melfourvonie, 3,600; Scarsough, 3,412; and Craig Phadrig, 1,150 feet respectively above the level of the sea. Inverness-shire is divided into two almost equal parts, by a valley running from south-west to north west, parallel to the Grampians. This valley is called Glen-more-na h' Alabin, or the "Great Glen of Albion," and appears to be a deep continuous rent between the chains of enormous mountains which range in the same direction; through the greater part of its length the glen is filled with water, or rather an almost connected succession of lakes, not rising very considerably above the level of the sea—a circumstance which suggested the comprehensive plan of forming the Caledonian Canal. Of that stupendous undertaking we shall have occasion to speak hereafter. On the eastern side of the county, agriculture is conducted with as much skill, spirit, and success as in any district northward of the Grampians; in the interior, and on the western coast, it languishes under the natural obstructions of soil and climate. Along the whole of the western division the climate is much more rainy than on the eastern side of the island; it is seldom fair weather in the latter with a westerly wind. On account of these disadvantages, the principal employment of the farmer in this district is the management of black cattle and sheep, especially the former. The mountains and forests are widely inhabited by the red deer and roe, who roam in safety through seclusions, and lodge in recesses impenetrable to man; the alpine and common hare, and other species of game are also abundant. The extensive plains which surround the lakes are in general fertile. The military roads in this county, made by the soldiers under General Wade, never fail to excite the astonishment of travellers. Additional roads were formed, and bridges constructed, under the direction of Government, through every district of this extensive shire. On the confines of the county are extensive tracts of natural wood, evidently the remains of much larger forests; the fir woods of Glenmore and Strathspey are supposed to be more than all the other natural woods of Scotland if summed together. The trees that grow naturally are oak, fir, birch, ash, mountain-ash, holly, elm, wild-green, hazel, and the Scottish poplar; those planted are chiefly larch, spruce, silver-fir, beech, plane, and fruit trees. Those districts in cultivation, along with those in the course of gradual adaptation to purposes of husbandry, are in the north-east or Lowland quarter, where there are to be seen many fine fields, yielding good crops of wheat, barley, oats and turnips; potatoes, in several parishes, are produced in great abundance. In the district in the vicinity of Spey, near Castle Grant, a very improved system of cultivation has for many years been introduced. In this shire, as in other counties in the north, the removal of the poorer native classes, or small farmers, by the landlords has thinned the population, expatriated thousands, and reduced to the lowest conceivable depths of human suffering those wretched families who have been permitted to remain in rude hamlets on the sea-shore. During the severe winters of 1836-7, and likewise 1846-7, the distress of the more indigent inhabitants of the Highlands (owing to the deplorable failure of their naturally limited crops, the extreme inclemency of the weather, and the almost total destitution of fuel) was of the most appalling description; in the islands more particularly this combination of calamities was experienced to a direful extent. In the Isle of Skye the want of fuel had reduced the unhappy occupants to such a state of desperation that, it has been asserted, lots were cast among a certain number of poor families to decide which should consent to the destruction of their hut for the purpose of furnishing firewood for the general good. The case of these poor people excited universal sympathy throughout the kingdom, and subscriptions, headed munificently by London, poured in for their relief; the sum thus promptly raised was very considerable. Among the provincial towns of England, Manchester stood eminently conspicuous in the humane and benevolent work. For some years past, great disaffection has existed amongst the small farmers, or crofters, as they are termed, in consequence of the excessive rents exacted from them by the landowners. This, at times, resulted in serious disturbances, and the officers who were enforcing the demands of the landowners had to be assisted by the military. A Land Bill has, however, been passed by Parliament, which, it is hoped, will materially ameliorate their condition. We now return from this digression to our more general and cheering account of the capabilities of this wide district. The exports of the county may be briefly enumerated in the articles of cattle, wool and corn; the skins of goats, deer, roes, foxes, hares and rabbits; salmon, herrings, dried and salted fish, and fir timber, with the produce of the labours of the hempen and thread manufactures. The spinning of flax and wool is the occupation of the females, in their respective families, over the whole county. The principal imports will be detailed under the head of INVERNESS. Limestone is everywhere abundant; and in many parts are to be found marble, slate and granite, the latter said to be the most beautiful in the world.

RIVERS AND LAKES, CANALS AND RAILWAYS.—The principal river is the Ness, which flows from Loch Ness to the Moray Firth; the next is the Spey, which, though a larger river in its lower parts, is about the same size while running through the shire; the smaller rivers are the Beauly, the Foyers, the Garry, the Coiltrie, the Glass, the Morriston, the Enneric, the Kinnie, with others of still minor note; the whole produce ample supplies of trout and salmon. On the Foyers is a celebrated waterfall, descending in one leap to the depth of two hundred feet; a dense mist is continually seen rising from the broken water, and the noise resulting from the fall may be heard at a considerable distance. The CALEDONIAN CANAL, before adverted to, is composed of a chain of lakes, connected with the sea on either side of the island by artificial watercourses and locks, and stretches across Inverness-shire, in a south-westerly direction, from Inverness, on the Moray Firth, to Loch Eil, on the western course—a distance of about sixty miles. To connect the several lakes by artificial navigation, and thereby the Western Ocean with the North Sea, by the Moray Firth was an undertaking to which a great portion of the public attention had long been directed; and it was at length commenced by Government in 1803-4. After a persevering labour of about eighteen years, and at an expense of upwards of £800,000, the canal was opened for the admission of vessels in 1822; up to 1830, the total expense fell very little short of one million sterling. The canal is twenty feet deep, fifty feet wide at bottom, and one hundred and ten feet wide at surface, and is much used by steamers and sailing vessels, more especially the former, large numbers of tourists going by this route to the north. Besides the lochs, which have been made subservient to this great line of canal navigation, there are others of greater or less magnitude scattered throughout the district; and several arms of the sea advance into the western shore of the county. RAILWAYS have extended their iron influence to this remote county by means of the Highland Railways, which are complete as far north as Thurso and Wick, an important branch of which runs by Dingwall to Strome Ferry, thus opening a communication with the Isle of Skye.

DIVISION, REPRESENTATION, &C.—Inverness-shire comprehends twenty-four parishes, and thirteen parts of parishes. The county is singularly destitute of towns - the only one it possesses being INVERNESS, which is a royal burgh; it joins with Fortrose (in Ross-shire), Nairn (in the county of that name), and Forres (in Morayshire), in sending one member to Parliament; and the county of Inverness returns another representative. The present member for the county is Charles Fraser-Mackintosh, Esq. The parliamentary constituency for 1888-9 numbered 7,922. The lord-lieutenant is Donald Cameron, Esq., of Lochiel. By the returns presented to the Government in 1871, the entire county contained a population of 41,104 males, and 46,911 females; total, 88,015. In 1881 the numbers stood—males, 43,852; females, 46,602; total, 90,454; showing an increase of 2,489 persons in ten years.

The valuation of the county for 1888-89 is (exclusive of railways, which amount to £12,027), £804,625.

ABERNETHY AND KINCARDINE

ARE two parishes, but united under the first-mentioned name. It is four miles S.S.W. from Grantown and is bounded on the north by Duthil and Inverallan, on the east by Kirkmichael, and is seperated on the south from Braemar by the celebrated Cairngorm mountain; its length is 15 miles, by a breadth of nearly 12. The river Nethy, from which the name is derived, runs through the parish, and falls into the Spey. There are several lochs—the principal being Loch Avon. Cairngorm mountain is one of the loftiest of the Grampians, being 4,050 feet above the sea level, and 1,750 feet from the surface of Loch Avon, which is a mile from its base. It has obtained great celebrity from having furnished large quantities of a particular species of topaz, but which are now nearly exhausted. There is a handsome hotel, viz., the Abernethy Hotel, where travellers and visitors will find first-class accommodation. In the parish are an Established church, and one for members of the Free Church, also several public schools. The Earl of Seafield is patron of the parish, which has an area of 78,012 acres. Population in 1881, 1,530.

BEAULY,

WITH THE PARISHES OF KILMORACK, KILTARLITY, KIRKHILL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BEAULY is a village in the extensive parish of KILMORACK, 35 miles S.S.W. from Tain, 12 from Inverness, and 9 s. from Dingwall standing on the south side of the river of the same name, as it pours into Loch Beauly, an inner branch of the Moray Firth. The situation of this place is beautiful, from the windings and falls of the river, and general appearance of the surrounding country—and hence its name, Beaulieu, that is, "fine place." There is a small harbour, to which vessels of one hundred and fifty tons burthern can come up at high water. The exports chiefly consist of timber, grain and wool; the imports being being principally coal and lime. In other respects its trade is of a local character. There are branches respectively of the Bank of Scotland and the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, established here; and three miles north-east of the town is the Ord distillery. There is a very handsome Roman Catholic cathedral, which adds considerably to the appearance of this neat little village. A sheriff's court for small debts is held in the months of January, May and September, in which claims are adjudicated to the amount £8 6s. 8d. Verging upon the extremity of the Frith stands the ruins of the priory, founded in the early part of the thirteenth century, and peopled by monks from France, who gave to the place its present name. The venerable remains form an object of curiosity and interest to the tourist, but the falls of Kilmorack are pre-eminent in attraction, and present a scene of great natural beauty. The banks of the river are bold and rocky, and in the course of its windings it divides in such a way as to form the fascinating island of Aigas. There is excellent salmon fishing in the Beauly, and at the falls many are occasionally caught by their leaping on the dry banks in their effort to surmount the cataract. It was formerly recorded that a late Lord Lovat, noticing the frequency of this mistake of that fish, once performed a curious experiment here. He made a fire on the brink of the river, and placed on it a large pot filled with water; speedily a salmon, making a leap in the wrong direction, tumbled into the pot, where it was soon boiled and eaten by his lordship and his attendants; this was done that he might boast in the south of the wonders that existed in the highlands (which were then but little known), and to say that in his country provisions were so abundant that if a fire were made and a pot set on it to boil on the banks of a river, the salmon would of themselves leap into the pot to be boiled! Two miles farther to the westward of the falls may be contemplated the splendid scenery of the valley of the Dhrium, allowed to surpass any other view in Scotland. Fairs for cattle are held on the Muir of Ord from the month of April to November, both inclusive; they generally occur on the second or third Wednesday in each month, but are regulated by the Falkirk trysts. The parish of Kilmorack has an area of 142,909 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 2,618, of which number Beauly had 915.

KILTARLITY is a parish three miles S.W. of Beauly. In it are Established and Free churches and four public schools. Beaufort Castle, in this parish, is the seat of Lord Lovat. Acreage, 61,896. Population in 1881, 2,134.

KIRKHILL is a parish 6 miles W. from Inverness. In it are Established and Free churches and public schools. Acreage, 11,585. Population in 1881, 1,480.

BOLESKINE WITH ABERTARFF,

AND THE VILLAGES OF FORT AUGUSTUS, URQUHART, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BOLESKINE with Abertarff is an united parish, twenty-four miles in length, and from ten to twelve in breadth, stretching along from the Pass of Inverfarigaig on the south side of Loch Ness to the east end of Loch Oich, embracing the great glen of Stratherrick, Foyers, the famed falls of Foyers, and the village of FORT AUGUSTUS, which latter stands on the western extremity of Loch Ness, and on the south bank of the Caledonian Canal, 30 miles N.E. of Fort William, and 33 S.W. from Inverness. This fort, with Fort George on the Moray Firth, and Fort William, are within the county of Inverness, the three forming a line of fortresses which were erected to overawe the Highlanders. The pass of Inverfarigaig is about two miles long, and at some parts is so narrow as to barely permit of the construction of a road. About a mile up the pass is erected a monument in memory of Dr. Bryce, a noted geologist, who was killed whilst in pursuit of his studies. The falls of Foyers are about three miles from Inverfarigaig, on the road passing along the shores of Loch Ness, and the falls of Cullaccy and Garry are distant two and eight miles respectively from Fort Augustus. Near the lower Falls of Foyers is the General's Hut (now the Lovat Arms Hotel) called after General Wade, who constructed most of the roads in the Highlands. In the village of Fort Augustus are places of worship for members of the Established and Free churches, together with a Roman Catholic monastery, erected on the site of the old barracks at Fort Augustus. There are also Established churches at BOLESKINE, GLENURQUHART, and INVERMORISTON. The parish in 1881 had a population of 1,448.

CAMPBELTOWN,

ARDERSIER, FORT GEORGE, PETTY, AND CROY.

CAMPBELTOWN is a village in the parish of Ardersier, 31 miles w. from Elgin, 19 w. from Forres, 10 N. from Inverness, 9½ w. from Nairn, and about a mile from Fort George; situated on the coast of a picturesque bay, and at the foot of an eminence called Cromwell's mount, on the summit of which are the remains of a fortification, and behind the view is very extensive, embracing parts of eight or nine counties. This place, which originated only from the residences of those connected with the garrison, is now a village of some pretensions, possesses many facilities for improvement, and has a strong chalybeate spring, which is much frequented by invalids. Some inns are in the village, and several schools. A fair is held annually on the 12th of August. The parish of Ardersier encloses an area of 3,824 acres, and in 1831 contained a population of 2,086; of this number the village of Campbeltown had 831.

FORT GEORGE, about a mile and a half from Campbeltown, was erected immediately after the year 1746, at an expense of £160,000, in order to keep the Highlanders in check. It covers 15 acres of a level point, projecting into the Moray Firth, the ramparts on three sides rising almost out of the sea; it is said to be one of the most regular fortifications in Britain. It was mounted by eighty cannons, on four bastions, and completely commands the entrance into the harbour of Inverness. A small pier projects from the fort into the sea, for the use of the ferry boats, which here communicate with the opposite coast of Ross shire.

CROY is a parish of 22,779 acres, partly in the county of Inverness and partly in that of Nairn, lying betwixt the river Nairn and the upper arm of the Moray Firth, having Ardersier on the north. There are an Established and a Free church, and a public school in the parish, the population of which in 1881 was 1,709. PETTY is a parish with an area of 9,776 acres, and contained in 1831 a population of 1,531 persons.

FORT WILLIAM,

BALLACHULISH NORTH AND SOUTH, BANAVIE, CORRAN FERRY, CORPACH, KILMONIVAIG, AND LAGGAN.

FORT WILLIAM (formerly called Maryburgh and also Gordonsburgh) is a town and seaport, in the parish of Kilmallie; 133 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 106 N.W. from Glasgow, 65 S.W. from Inverness, and 40 N.N.E. from Oban; situated on the eastern shore and near the head of Loch Linnhe. It is now the seat of a sheriff, with a handsome court house at the west end of the town, erected at a cost of over £8,000. The chief industry is that of distilling, whilst agriculture and fishing are carried on to a small extent, and it is a place of considerable resort for the tourist and the traveller in the summer months. A communication is maintained with Glasgow and Inverness by the Caledonian and Crinan canals daily during the summer, and twice a week during the winter. The places of worship are an Established church, a plain but substantial building of recent erection, a Free church, one for the Roman Catholics, and St. Andrew's, a new Episcopal church, begun and finished during the incumbency of the Rev. Canon MacColl, the present rector (1879-82). It is built on the site of the old church erected in 1817, and the cost—which must have been considerable—has been met by local and outside aid, G. B. Davey, Esq. Spean Lodge, having been one of its most munificent benefactors. The style of architecture is early French Gothic, and the building consists of nave and chancel, tower and spire on the north side of the chancel and a spacious sacristy on the south. Internally the roof is of pine, open to the ridge, of elaborate design, and the whole fittings are of the best description. The windows throughout are of stained glass, and the church—which is seated for over 250 persons—contains an excellent organ. A substantial stone quay was erected here in 1834 by the Society for Promoting the British Fisheries, and by subscriptions, at an expense of about £1,500. A very handsome suspension bridge of 250 feet span was erected over the river Lochy by Donald Cameron, Esq. of Lochiel, at a cost of about £2,000. The town consists of one tolerably regular street, which contains some good buildings, and the branches of the British Linen Co. Bank, the Bank of Scotland, and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited; these establishments affording facilities for monetary and commercial transactions in this remote part of the kingdom. Fort William is governed by Police Commissioners under the Lindsay Act; and by the Reform Act it was appointed one of the stations for taking the votes of the county electors. The sheriff substitute holds a court here every Thursday during the session.

The chief object of attraction in this district is, of course, the majestic Ben Nevis, which is the highest attainable point of Her Majesty's British dominions, being 4,406 feet above the level of the sea. This mountain is visited annually by upwards of 5,000 people, and upon the summit the Scottish Meteorological Society have now erected a permanent Observatory, which was opened in November, 1883, and cost nearly £6,000, raised mainly by public subscription. Mr. R. T. Omond, F.R.S.E. is the superintendent, with two assistants. The ascent to the top, which used to be very difficult, is now rendered comparatively easy by a winding path or bridle road from the county road at Achintee to the summit, which has been constructed and is kept in repair at great expense by the directors of the Ben Nevis Observatory. A charge of one shilling is made for each person who makes use of this path in ascending the mountain, and three shillings for each person on horseback. Those who wish to use the path are supposed to provide themselves with the necessary road-permits before starting, and place them in the box kept for that purpose on arriving at the top. These road-permits give the purchaser the privilege of using the visitors' room at the Observatory and of sending telegrams at the usual postal rates. Many tourists ascend Ben Nevis at evening, in order to see the sun rising in the German Ocean. Should the intrepid adventurer be so fortunate as to attain the topmost region when it is fine, and the view unobscured by clouds or mist, the contemplation of the almost boundless expanse of prospect spread out far beneath his aerial position will amply compensate him for his toil and perseverance. There are now upon the summit very comfortable refreshment rooms, with sleeping accommodation, in connection with the Imperial Hotel, Fort William, which are open (Sundays excepted) during the tourist season. Referring again to the Observatory, where several observations are recorded every hour of the day and night, the directors have added a printing press to the establishment, for printing each day the observations, with a view to their distribution among the more distinguished meteorologists and prominent meteorological institutions in different parts of the world. Its erection has been a costly one from beginning to end, and it is maintained at considerable expense. The London Meteorological Society contributes £100 annually towards its support, the remainder—amounting in all to about £250 a year—being met by the directors out of contributions of members or public subscriptions. Any person wishing to subscribe to the observatory fund may do so through Mr. R. T. Omond, the superintendent; or to the honorary treasurer, Dr. James Sanderson.

The fort, from which the town derives its modern name, "Fort William," is a little distance north of the town, and was first founded in 1655 during the protectorate of Cromwell, by the advice and under the direction of General Monk. The ramparts of the fort are still extant, and the moat is now used as gardens; the houses occupied by the officers and soldiers are still standing, but they have been internally refitted. The fort was attacked by the Highland clans under Prince Charles, in 1746, and made a successful defence. In the river Lochy, to the north-east of the town, is a long-established and sometimes very productive salmon fishery. A mile and a half north-east from Fort William is Invernochy Castle, said to have been founded anterior to the Christian era. Tradition may err in this particular, but it was certainly rebuilt on its present extensive site by an order from the Scottish Government, in the reign of Edward I. of England, by one of the Cumyn family; the western tower being still called Cumyn tower. It consists of four large round towers, thirty feet high, connected by a wall, or screen, twenty feet high and ten feet thick, forming a quadrangle of large dimensions; the wall is in a fair state of preservation, but the towers are much decayed. In 1835, the then proprietor, the Marquis of Abercorn, with injudicious taste, enclosed the whole structure at considerable expense. In 1847 was erected at Fort William a handsome obelisk of granite, thirty feet high, by Sir Duncan Cameron, Bart. In 1852 a monument was erected in High street, to the late William Kennedy, Esq. M.D. in commemoration of his professional skill and unwearied benevolence. Half a mile from the town is one of the distilleries of Mr. Donald P. M'Donald, another one belonging to the same gentleman being situated about two miles from Fort William. They are noted for the manufacture of the famous "Long John" whisky, and give employment to upwards of 200 hands. At the west end of the town, Mr. M'Donald has built a pier for his own use, and now owns two steamers which are constantly employed in carrying material to and from Fort William. The whole country between Fort William and Glasgow is perhaps unequalled in Europe for variety of scenery. First class accommodation is supplied to tourists and commercial gentlemen and families at the Chevalier, Caledonian Imperial, Ben Nevis, Alexandra, and West End hotels. Fairs are held on the second Wednesdays in June, July and November. In 1881 the population of the parish of Kilmallie was 4,157, and of Fort William, 1,594.

BANAVIE is a hamlet in the parish of Kilmallie, being 3 miles N.N.E. distant from Fort William, and about one mile from Corpach, beautifully situated on the Caledonian Canal, and steamers going north and south call here daily for passengers. The drives and walks in this district are some of the finest in Scotland. The Lochiel Arms Hotel, of which Mr. John Menzies is the proprietor, is a handsome and commodious building, commanding magnificent and extensive views, facing Ben Nevis, and close to the pier. Private families, tourists and others visiting the hotel will find every comfort. The post office stands a little to the left of the hotel.

LAGGAN is a parish in Badenoch district, measuring from north-east to south-west upwards of 20 miles, and from north to south a little over that number. It contains Loch Laggan, a large sheet of water eight miles in length and one in width. The village is situated between Fort William and Kingussie, on the great north road, by Dalwhinnie and Garvamore, about half-way between the two. Acreage, 150,106. Population in 1881, 917, of whom 810 are Gaelic speaking.

KILMONIVAIG is a very large parish, 9 miles N.E. of Fort William. The places of worship are Established, Free and Roman Catholic churches. Acreage, 267,071. In 1881 the parish had a population of 1,928.

BALLACHULISH NORTH is situated on the north shore of Loch Leven, about 12 miles S. from Fort William. This place has a small neat church of the Establishment, and also Free and Episcopalian churches. In BALLACHULISH SOUTH are productive slate quarries. Not far from the quarries is found valuable limestone, its product possessing superior adhesive qualites. Ballachulish North is united with Corran-ferry North (in Argyleshire), on the opposite side of Loch Linnhe, in one ecclesiastical parish; the latter is about 3 miles W. from the former, and 9 S. from Fort William. About a mile west, not far from the border of Loch Linnhe, is Ardgour House, the mansion and family residence of the Right Honourable Alexander T. Maclean, surrounded with fine plantations, at the foot of the Ardgowar hills. In 1881 the population was 749.

CORPACH is a widely-spread, but not very populous, village on the north shore of Loch Eil (in the county of Argyle, but in the same parish as Fort William), 3 miles N. from the Fort; though this village is in Argyleshire, the principal part of the parish of Kilmallie, in which it is situate, is in the county of Inverness, and is surrounded by that county and Loch Eil. Corpach is chiefly to be noticed as being the southern commencement of that great national undertaking, the Caledonian Canal, which here enters Loch Eil by four locks; a little above are eight others, called Neptune's Staircase; they are capable of a imitting vessels of three hundred tons (not drawing above twelve feet of water), and each lock rises eight feet. Kilmallie parish church, erected in 1784, is situated about half a mile from the end of the canal, at Corpach. Near the church stands a pyramidical obelisk, of considerable height, with a large tablet of white marble at its base, and an inscription composed by Sir Walter Scott, raised to the memory of Colonel John Cameron, who was slain at the battle of Waterloo, in 1815, while commanding the 92nd Highlanders. The road through Corpach leads to the district of Arisaig, about 35 miles distant, and Moidart and Loch Shiel. At Borradale, in Moidart, Prince Charles Stuart landed on the 25th of July, 1745. He sailed up Loch Shiel on the 18th of August; the following day he landed and entered Glenfinnan, where he was met by Cameron of Lochiel, and Macdonald of Keppock, with their clansmen. Commemorative of this circumstance, Macdonald of Glenaladale has erected a monument.

INVERNESS,

DAVIOT WITH DUNLICHTY, DORES, AND MOY WITH DALAROSSIE.

INVERNESS, the capital of the Highlands, and of the large county of its name, is situated on the banks of the river Ness, near to its confluence with the Beauly Firth, and commands the eastern approach to the Great Glen of Scotland (Glen-more-na-h'-Albyn). The distance by rail from Edinburgh is 195 miles N.N.W., via Fife, and 213, via Stirling; 108½ N. by W. from Aberdeen; 208 N. from Glasgow; 199¼ N.W. from Dundee; 168 S. from Thurso; 144 N.N.W. from Perth; 26 S.W. from Forres; and 37 S.W. from Elgin. We learn from Richards's "Itinerary" (one of the oldest documents extant relative to the affairs of Great Britain, and referring to the period between A.D. 138 and 170) that Inverness was one of the ten cities of Britain enjoying the Jus Latinitatis; only two others in Scotland are mentioned—Perth and Dumbarton. After the Romans withdrew, Inverness became the seat of the Pictish monarchy. Here Macbeth, the great Lord of Ross and Moray, had a castle, which Boethius assigns as the scene of Duncan's murder; Buchanan's relation is to the same effect. Shakspere's play of "Macbeth" has served to make the place historically famous, though the actual murder may well have occurred in any other of Macbeth's castles. This castle, says the great poet—

> " — hath a pleasant seat; the air
> Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself
> Unto our gentler senses."

It is supposed to have stood a short distance east of the town, upon an eminence called the "Crown," at the north-east corner of which there are still extensive remains. After the fall of Macbeth, Malcolm Canmore destroyed it, and erected a new castle, which was in existence until 1746, when it was blown up during the rebellion. The handsome County Buildings now stand upon its site.

The situation of Inverness is so singularly beautiful as to have compelled a recognition of its claims to that character, even amid the dry technical details of its great charter; "its good and pleasant situation" is there noticed as one of the reasons for its endowment as a royal burgh. Inverness is a royal burgh of great antiquity, having, it is said, received a charter in 1067 from Malcolm Canmore; and there are on record four charters in its favour from King William the Lion, besides various subsequent ones by several of his successors. Its great, or, as it is called, "golden" charter, is that which was granted by James VI. in 1591, and which confirms previous grants. The municipal government is vested in a provost, four bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and fourteen councillors, in all twenty-one, who have the management of considerable charitable funds. The burgh, in conjunction with those of Nairn, Forres, and Fortrose, returns one member to the Imperial Parliament, the present representative being Robert B. Finlay, Esq. The environs of Inverness combine picturesque beauty in detail, with magnificence as a whole —"uniting," says a tourist, "two opposite qualities, and each in the greatest perfection—the characters of a rich, open, lowland country, with those of the wildest Alpine scenery; both being also close at hand, and in many places intermixed; while to all this is added a series of maritime views not often excelled." The walks near the town are deserving of a stranger's perambulation; whether along the banks of the river to the wooded islands of the Ness, or along the sea shore, or by the margin of the canal; or to the singularly-shaped hill of Tomnahurich, or "hill of the fairies" (which, with singular appropriateness has been converted into a cemetery, and now forms one of the finest and most picturesque spots for the purpose in Britain); or to the summit of Craig Phadric (the vitrification of which affords matter of speculation to the antiquarian); to the Druidical circles in the "Leys;" to Clava, a literal "City of Tombs," or to Drumossie Moor, where the last of the Stuarts, "Bonnie Prince Charlie," sustained his final defeat, and "the clans of Culloden were scattered in flight;" in each and all of these directions there is much to please and interest the man of taste or science. The eminent lexicographer, Dr. Johnson, in speaking of Inverness, says —"the language of this town has long been considered as peculiarly elegant;" a fact which he ascribes to the intermixture of Cromwell's soldiers with the inhabitants. This is a fanciful hypothesis in many ways, and at once appears hardly reconcilable with the fact that the Gaelic continues to be the prevailing language still spoken by the common people; the soldiers must have learnt the one when they taught the other. A more feasible theory, and one more in accordance with the facts, is that Inverness has always been a centre of education for the north, and has many pretensions to elegance and refinement such as are not found in any other town north of Edinburgh. A large part of its population consists of retired gentlemen, and the aristocracy of the neighbourhood is both numerous and influential. This has had its effect on the inhabitants, who are influenced by the prevailing tone of refinement, and unconsciously appear to reflect it in their manner of speech. The greater part of the town lies on the eastern part of the Ness—a broad, clear, and equably flowing stream—which is here crossed by a new and handsome suspension bridge erected at the expense of the Government, and maintained by an annual assessment levied over the northern counties; this structure, costing £26,000, takes the place of the old stone bridge. The old bridge, consisting of seven arches, erected in 1688, was, on the 25th of January, 1849, carried away by the overflowing of the river, when that portion of the town lying on the west side of it was completely inundated, and the inhabitants compelled to make use of boats to pass through the streets. There are in addition two elegant suspension bridges for foot passengers, the lower of which was opened on the 2nd of May, 1882, by the late Sir Alexander Matheson, Bart., of Lochalsh, M.P.; and a stout wooden traffic bridge at the lower part of the town. The principal streets are Union street, immediately opposite the railway station, which, though not of great length, is much admired for its uniformity and handsome appearance; High street, Church street, Academy street, Castle street, and Bridge street, which contain many fine public buildings and places of business. Amongst the public buildings we must first mention the Castle of Inverness, being pre-eminent as much for its architectural beauty as for its commanding position. This modern edifice was built in 1836 upon the site of the old castle erected by Malcolm Canmore, as before mentioned, at a cost of £10,000, for the accommodation of the courts of justice in the northern circuit, and for the preservation of the records and transactions of the judicial business of the country. It is built from the design of Mr. Burn, architect, Edinburgh, after the old English castellated style, and harmonises well, from its varied projecting and retreating masses, its square and round towers, with the outline of the surrounding scenery. It contains a courtroom, a commodious county hall, and various suitable apartments for judicial business and the convenience of the different functionaries connected therewith. The court house is adorned with a splendid painting, by Raeburn, of the late Charles Grant, of Glenelg, long M.P. for the county; and in a niche of the staircase is a beautiful bust, by the late Patrick Park, R.S.A., of the late William Fraser-Tytler, many years sheriff and convener of the county. Being the seat of the sheriff of the county, the courts of that functionary are held here. The sheriff's small debt court is held every Friday during session time, for the recovery of sums not exceeding £12; and a justice of peace court is held monthly for adjudicating claims not exceeding £5 in amount. Her Majesty's Prison adjoins the court house buildings, and its castellated style is much admired. Another important building, completed in 1884, is the extensive range of military barracks erected by Government on the Hut of Health, situated about a mile to the north-east of the town. The barracks were built in consequence of the new arrangement of the country into regimental districts, by which Inverness became the head-quarters of its territorial regiment, and have cost about £50,000. The regimental district is No. 79, and is the head-quarters of the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders, the depot being at Fort George, situated 12 miles from Inverness. Among the other public buildings, &c. (exclusive of edifices for divine worship) is the Working Men's Club, situated in Bridge street, a handsome and commodious new building, which owes its origin and present position to the great liberality and untiring exertions of the late Donald M'Dougall, Esq., Dunolly Cottage. It possesses an extensive library, inclusive of a contribution of books received from her Majesty the Queen; it also contains a reading room, billiard room and lecture hall, and is held in trust by the Town Council for the behoof of the community.

To the late Mr. Grant, of Bught, the community are mainly indebted for the handsome new Town Hall, which occupies the site of the old structure facing the Exchange. In 1873, Mr. Grant bequeathed £5,000 for the purpose of aiding in its erection, and the foundation stone was accordingly laid in 1878, by Mr. Alexander Simpson, then provost of the burgh. The style of architecture is early decorated Gothic, with details of a French character. The building occupies an area of about 700 square yards, with a frontage of 73 feet to High street. It is mainly two storeys in height, the different floors being well marked by base and string courses, and the wall head finished at a height of 47 feet by an ornamental parapet. The centre portion has a richly ornamented gable flanked by round towers, and an oak spirelet surmounts the whole. The town's arms occupy the middle of the portion over the centre window. The Castle street elevation has a shop on the ground floor, and four trefoil headed windows similar to those in the front elevation, above which are three large double light windows, with arched tops and carved capitals. In front is the main staircase, lighted by three windows, the rear filled with stained glass containing the town's arms, the royal arms, and the Scottish arms respectively, and on either side of the staircase on the ground floor are the offices of the town clerk and town chamberlain. The Town Hall is 66 feet long 35 feet broad and 33 feet high; the ceiling is of pitch pine panelled and richly decorated with heraldic emblems. Above the centre of the three doorways is the orchestral gallery with musicians' room behind. The hall is lighted by fourteen windows filled with stained glass, bearing the arms of the Highland clans. The central stained glass window was the gift of Mrs. Warrand, of Bught. The end windows show subjects representing Arts, Science, Law, Agriculture, Education, Literature, Arms of the Corporate Trades of the burgh, and the Royal and Scottish Arms. The hall contains portraits of the late Prince Consort, and Duncan Forbes, of Culloden, and James Robertson of Aultnaskiach, former provosts; a fine copy of Ramsay's original portrait of Flora Macdonald, President Forbes, Hector Munro, of Fowlis, some time M.P. for the burgh, and also a bust of the late Dr. Carruthers, by Alexander Munro. The work in the various windows was executed by Messrs. Adam and Small, of Glasgow, and the vestibule paving, &c., by Messrs. W. Hawley and Co. of Edinburgh. A residence for the janitor occupies the top of the building, the council chamber the west end of the Castle wynd elevation, and the provost's room the east end or Castle street elevation. The furniture was specially designed by the architects, the provost's chair being made of oak richly carved. The building was formally opened by H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, on the 19th January, 1882, and cost about £15,000. A handsome fountain, the gift of Dr. George Forbes, occupies the front of the Exchange. Underneath the fountain rests the time-honoured palladium of the burgh, Clachnacuddin. Sir Walter Scott calls this stone the Charter Stone of the Burgh, and in "Anderson's Guide" it is said "natives of Inverness in all parts of the world turn with fond affection to friends round the Clachnacuddin." The word is Celtic, and means the "stone of the tubs," for it was here the young women used to rest their tubs when coming from the river Ness, and around it the old burghers gathered for their social talk.

The Highland Club House, in High street, a commodious and substantial structure, and originally an hotel, greatly adds to the appearance of the street. The Young Men's Christian Association, at the corner of High street and Castle street is an ornamental building, costing about £3,500, and consists of library, hall, and class rooms. A fine new theatre has been erected on the east side of the river, in Bank street, the architects being Messrs. Matthews and Lawrie, Inverness. The Free Library, Museum, and School of Science and Art, situated in Castle wynd, was completed at a cost of £3,800, and was opened on the 14th October, 1881, by Joseph Mitchell, Esq., of Viewhill. It consists of library, museum, class rooms, and curator's house. The library contains 5,000 volumes, and, as its name signifies, is free, being supported by a small rate levied on the owners and occupiers of property in the town. At the head of Bridge street a handsome spire attracts attention; this was the site of the former gaol, which was surmounted by this spire, rising to a height of 180 feet, and erected in 1701. This town is the chosen and favourite head-quarters of the Northern Meeting, composed of noblemen and gentlemen in the northern counties, associated for the purpose of fostering the games and sports peculiar to the Highlands. They have large and elegant rooms in Church street set apart for that purpose, and a pavilion and park. The Inverness Farmers' Society, and numerous other institutions, hold their meetings in the town at stated periods. The town is also the head-quarters of two battalions of infantry (militia and volunteers), and a brigade of volunteer artillery. The militia are mostly raised among the sturdy fishermen on the west coast and isles, but the town alone contributes 800 volunteers between artillery and infantry, a very respectable figure in proportion to the number of inhabitants.

The Northern Infirmary, erected in 1803, and situated on the west bank of the river, between the Ness Islands and the town is a large and well-constructed building, with an imposing exterior. The Inverness Forbes Dispensary for the sick poor, in Huntly street, is also a good building, supported by voluntary contributions. The Northern Counties Institute for the Blind, situated on Hill terrace, is an old school building, which was purchased from the School Board on the erection of a new school in the same quarter, and converted into a commodious home for blind persons in the northern counties. It contains dining hall, class rooms, workshop, dormitories, and matron's and servants' rooms, and was opened in March, 1881. The cost of the building and re-construction would be about £2,000, and it has accommodation for 18 blind persons. In it the blind are taught to read and write, and do various descriptions of fancy and other work. Four educational institutions must be noticed as highly efficient in the benefits they confer. The College, situated on the west side of the town, founded in 1873, originally cost over £9,000, and was designed by Mr. Alexander Ross, of Inverness. The Royal Academy, a liberally endowed institution, in Academy street, was established in 1792 for the purpose of supplying a higher education to the inhabitants of Inverness and the surrounding country, and was a few years ago much extended and improved. In 1863 important changes were effected in the organisation of the school, in order to do away with the conflicting interests of several independent masters, and to enable the directors to offer to the pupils the advantages of a systematic course of instruction. At the same time the former building, which is now used by the boys alone, underwent extensive repairs and alterations by which its comfort and convenience have been much increased. The present arrangements were completed in 1865, by the erection of a new building for the accommodation of girls. The Farraline Park Institution, or Bell's School, was established in 1842, by bequest of the late Dr. Bell, LL.D. of Madras, for the benefit of the middle and humbler class of children, who are instructed in all the useful branches of an English education; their number is generally about five hundred. The premises form an elegant building, in an open and airy situation on the east side of the town. The front is embellished by a beautiful row of fluted columns. The High Public School, situated on Kingsmills road, and erected at a cost of about £8,000, is managed by the local School Board. The other Board schools are complete and commodious structures.

The religious edifices comprise the High Parish church, Church street, an ancient structure with tower and spire; West Parish church, Huntly street; Free High church, Bank street, a modern erection, with an imposing spire; North Free church, North Church place; East Free church, Academy street; West Free church, Upper Kessock street; United Presbyterian church, Union street; Independent chapel, Fraser street; Wesleyan Methodist chapel, Inglis street; Roman Catholic chapel, Huntly street; Episcopal chapel (St. John's), Church street; and St. Andrew's Episcopal Cathedral, Ardross street, an imposing structure, the foundation stone of which was laid October 17th, 1866, by the late Dr. Longley, Archbishop of Canterbury; it was opened for divine service in September, 1869. The building is in the decorated Gothic style, and has, with all its furniture and fittings throughout, been executed from the designs of Mr. Alexander Ross, Inverness. The following are the principal dimensions:—Length of nave, 90 feet; choir and chancel, 60 feet; width of nave, 60 feet; 30 feet between the columns and 15 feet in each of the aisles. External dimensions:—166 feet long by 72 feet across west front; height of towers, 100 feet; spire, 100 feet; total, 200 feet; height to ridge of roof, 88 feet. The contractors for building, carving, and every other particular were almost exclusively tradesmen of Inverness. The transepts are arranged after the old Scotch model, to project slightly beyond the aisles. Externally, the building exhibits a nave, with aisles, transepts, and apsidal chancel of equal height. At the west end are situated two towers, each for the present without spires, but carried up to the spring of spires, a height of 100 feet; the ultimate height being nearly 200 feet. The north tower contains a fine peal of bells, the cost of which was defrayed by public subscription and private donations—a testimony to the esteem in which the late bishop of the diocese, Dr. Eden, Primus, was held by all classes of the community. At the north-east angle is the octagonal chapter house. The cathedral is built of a light-red sandstone from Conon quarry, near Dingwall, the dressings being of a warm cream tint freestone from Coveses, near Elgin. The north tower forms a side entrance through a porch in its base, and in the south tower is the baptistry; the main entrance being situated in the west front between the towers. This entrance opens into a cloister, formed into a handsome stone screen, extending across the end of the nave from tower to tower, thus forming a vista through the north porch, cloister, and baptistry, the breadth of the building. The screen is fitted with clear plate glass, adding much to the general interior effect, and admitting of a full view of the cathedral, without actually entering within the part set aside for divine worship. The cost of this beautiful building was over £20,000. A list of the officiating ministers for the whole will be found under the head of "Public Buildings," in the Directory.

Commerce, Trade, &c.—At the town, harbour, and Thornbush quay, and also at the Caledonian Canal wharves, within a mile of the town, vessels of considerable tonnage may receive or discharge their cargoes, while large ships have excellent anchorage in Kessock roads, just above the confluence of the river with the sea. The exports from this port are chiefly grain, potatoes, wool, timber, salmon, &c. The imports comprise timber, Archangel tar, guano, and wheat. There are ship and boat building yards, two manufactories for woollen cloths, a tobacco manufactory, two breweries, several aerated water manufactories, two iron foundries, and two distilleries, one of which (the Inverness Distillery) is situated at Millburn, close to the new military barracks; the other (the Glen Albyn) at the Caledonian Canal basin, where there is every facility for carrying on an extensive trade of this description. There are no fewer than seven banking companies established in Inverness, and a National Security Savings Bank; these are noticed under their proper head in the Directory of the town. The premises of the Caledonian Bank, erected in 1849, form a very handsome building on the north side of High street; it is of freestone, having a row of elegant Corinthian columns in front, and is highly ornamental to the locality in which it stands. The shops in Inverness are well supplied with goods of every description, and are resorted to not only by the inhabitants of the immediate vicinity, but also by those of remoter districts, and by many from the contiguous counties. The following newspapers are issued from the press of Inverness—The Courier, on Tuesday and Friday; the Chronicle on Wednesday, the Highland News on Saturday, and the Scottish Highlander on Thursday. The Celtic Magazine is also published on the first of each month. During the summer months large numbers of visitors come to the town, accommodation for whom can easily be found in the large and handsome hotels which Inverness is noted to contain. Principal among these are the Station Hotel, adjoining the railway station; the Royal, opposite the railway station; the Caledonian, in Church street; the Waverley Temperance Hotel in Union street; the Imperial, in Academy street; and the Victoria on Ness walk. Inverness, being the centre to which the principal lines of road in the Highlands converge—having the Caledonian Canal on the one hand, and the Moray Firth on the other—maintains a rapid frequent, and easy intercourse, both by land and water, with all parts of the kingdom. It is also the head-quarters of the Highland Railway, whose large works afford employment to about a thousand artisans, besides numerous officials. It is in regular communication by rail with Wick and Thurso in the north; with Strome Ferry, the terminus of the Dingwall and Skye railway on the west coast (from which the company's steamers sail to Portree in Skye, and MacBrayne's steamers to Stornoway, Glasgow, &c.), and with Aberdeen, Perth, Dundee, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and all the rest of the kingdom.

Markets and Fairs.—The Beauly, or Muir of Ord, are the most important cattle fairs, and are held on the Muir of Ord, on the third Thursday of January; on the third Thursday of February; on the third Wednesday and Thursday of March; on the third Wednesday and Thursday of April; on the second Wednesday and Thursday of May; on the third Wednesday and Thursday of June; on the second Thursday of July, for half-bred sheep; and on the third Wednesday and Thursday for sheep and cattle; on the Wednesday and Thursday before Falkirk in August; on the Wednesday and Thursday before Falkirk in September; on the Wednesday and Thursday before Falkirk, in October; on the Wednesday and Thursday before Edinburgh Hollow fair, in November; on the Thursday after the third Wednesday in December. At all the markets, Wednesday is the principal day for the sale of sheep and lambs, and is held exclusively for that purpose; and Thursday for the sale of cattle, horses, sheep, pigs, &c. The Inverness markets are held on Friday following the Muir of Ord markets. According to the census returns for 1871, Inverness contained a population of 14,510; and by those for 1881, 17,387. We have extracted, with a few alterations, from "Anderson's Guide to the Highlands" (an able, scientific, and well got up work), the following list of objects in and about Inverness worthy of being visited by strangers.—

CONVEYANCE BY WATER.

INVERNESS, THE WESTERN ISLES, AND GLASGOW.

The Steamers of David MacBrayne (Glasgow) ply regularly during the year between Inverness and Glasgow, via Caledonian and Crinan Canals. A steamer leaves Inverness daily (Sunday excepted), carrying H.M. mails to Lochness and Fort Augustus, at 3 p.m., and leaves Fort Augustus every morning (Sunday excepted) at six. This service is in connection with the limited mail trains to and from the South. In the summer months there is additional communication each way by swift steamers, viz. during May and June, from Inverness and Glasgow, on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 7 a.m. and daily during July, August and September. In connection with these, from Oban, the company's steamers ply to Staffa and Iona, Glencoe, Skye and Gairloch, Stornoway, &c. Steamers carrying goods as well as passengers leave Inverness and Glasgow twice a week (Monday and Thursday) during the whole year. Steamers likewise ply regularly (twice a week in summer and once a week in winter) from Glasgow to Oban, Tobermory, Portree and Stornoway, calling at the various intermediate ports in Mull and Skye; also fortnightly at Gairloch, Ullapool, Lochinvar, Lochmaddy and Tarbert (Harris.) Passengers and goods from Inverness for these places change steamers at Oban. There is also a daily mail steamer between Oban and Tobermory, and Oban and Fort William; also daily between Strome and Portree and Strome and Stornoway, three times weekly from Portree, Tarbert (Harris), Rodel, Lochmaddy and Dunvegan

KINGUSSIE,

ALVIE, LAGGAN, DALWHINNIE, NEWTONMORE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KINGUSSIE, the Gaelic name of which is the termination of the "Pine Forest," is the name of a parish and beautiful village, 44 miles S. from Inverness, and 73 N. from Perth, on the great road between the two towns, and 50 miles N.E. from Fort William. It is the capital of the once renowned lordship of Badenoch, and previous to the year 1864 was all but inaccessible to the general public. By the opening of the Inverness and Perth Junction, now designated the Highland Railway, the beautiful and mountainous scenery of the district is now within easy reach of the tourist, and from the number who have already visited it, it promises to become a favourite resort. The district in which the village is situated is nearly in the centre of the Highlands of Scotland, where the genuine race of the Gael and their original language existed at one time in its purity. The inhabitants in the time of war are fond of military life, and the 42nd and 92nd Highland regiments included men from this quarter; the late Duke of Gordon being the popular colonel of these corps for many years. The commissioners of roads and bridges, in prosecution of their liberality towards the Highlands of Scotland, opened a beautiful new line of road from Kingussie to Fort William, by Loch Laggan, through part of the remains of the ancient Caledonian forest, and in sight of the famed parallel roads in Glenroy. A more romantic route for the traveller than this by Loch Laggan is rarely to be seen. The Duke of Abercorn erected a costly and beautiful shooting establishment (Ardverikie Lodge) on the banks of the lake, in which Her Majesty resided for about six weeks in the year 1846; it is now occupied by Sir John W. Ramsden, Bart., the proprietor. Another improvement in this district was effected by the erection of a substantial wooden bridge over the Spey, which previously was only crossed by a ferry. The village stands on the north bank of the river, not far from the north base of the Grampian Hills, in sight of Cairngorm, famous for its transparent stones, and Ben Macdhui, one of the loftiest mountains in Britain. The village contains a county building, in which the justices of peace courts for the district of Badenoch are held, and a sheriff's small debt court is held in January, May and September.

The places of worship are the Established church, a Free church, built in 1877, and capable of accommodating a large congregation; and a Roman Catholic chapel. There are three burial grounds in the place, two of which are known to be of great antiquity, the walls of the places of worship being still visible. One of the cemeteries is named after St. Columbus, and is said to have been originally dedicated to that holy personage. On the south bank of the river, opposite the village, stand the ruins of Ruthven Castle, which was a barrack in the reign of George II., and burnt down in 1745. It was a place of great antiquity and note, having been the residence and castle of Walter Cumming, Lord of Badenoch, and his ancestors, who at one period lorded over almost all the Highlands of Scotland. Walter Cumming's oppression and tyranny became so intolerable to all within his power, which was very extended, that the Clan Chattan (M'Pherson) threw off the yoke, and expelled the tyrant from the country; for which deed of valour they acquired the red hand and dagger, in addition to their coat of arms. Ruthven Castle was the rallying point of those brave but deluded heroes of 1745-6, where they assembled after the battle of Culloden, in considerable strength and high spirits, eager and anxious to be again led against the Duke of Cumberland. Balls and merriment were kept up by the officers and men, for several nights, while expresses were despatched in quest of the Prince, who was found wandering in the mountains and making for the Hebrides, sunk in spirits and in deep despair, returning the answer to his faithful adherents "that all was over with him." Their loss at Culloden was nothing compared to the depression this caused to their spirits by disappointment. From that moment they dispersed, broken-hearted, to meet no more. Three miles east of the village is Belleville House, the seat of C. B. J. M'Pherson, Esq. and built by James M'Pherson, Esq., translator of some of Ossian's poems, &c. Near to the house and roadside is a neat monument to the memory of the "bard of Morven;" and half-way between it and the village, a little off the road, is to be seen a cave of great antiquity and curiosity, worth the stranger's notice. Eight miles south-west of Kingussie, on the Fort William road, stands Cluny Castle, the seat of Colonel Ewen M'Pherson, the chief of the Clan Chattan. Eight miles to the east, close to the Spey, and in a favourite spot, the romantic vale of Kinrara, are interred the remains of the late Duchess of Gordon, and on a rock in the same vale has been erected a beautiful monument of granite, ninety feet high, to the memory of the late Duke; it was raised by subscription, amounting to about £1,200. About five miles from Kingussie, on the Perth road, is Invernahavon Moor, celebrated for a hard fought battle between the clans Macintosh and Cameron, and in which Cluny and the M'Phersons ultimately interfered, the consequences of which gave occasion, sixteen years afterwards, for the bloody contest between thirty M'Phersons and the same number of Davidsons, on the North Inch of Perth, in presence of King Robert III. of Scotland and his Court, from which eleven of the former and only one of the latter returned alive, and all seriously wounded. Partial notice of this memorable event is to be found in Sir Walter Scott's "Fair Maid of Perth." The hills of Badenoch are nowhere surpassed for the abundance of all sorts of game to be found amongst them, which brings a great number of noblemen and gentlemen to the country during the shooting season. John Leslie, the celebrated Bishop of Ross, in Scotland, was a natural son of the parson of Kingussie, in Badenoch, and born there in 1527. He had his education in the University of Aberdeen, and in 1547 was made a canon of the cathedral. He was the principal opponent of John Knox. The Police Act was adopted in 1867, and since that time the valuation of property has doubled. Water has been introduced, by gravitation, at a considerable cost, and the natural beauty of the place much improved; hence it has been selected by many as a place of summer resort. There are several fairs held at Kingussie during the year, but the days for holding are for the most part regulated by the Beauly and Falkirk fairs. Acreage of the parish, 116,182. Population in 1881, 1,987.

LAGGAN is a parish in the district of Badenoch, extending from north-east to south-west upwards of 20 miles. It is bounded by Boleskine on the north, Kingussie on the east, by the mountains of Perthshire on the south, and by Kilmanivaig on the west. The river Spey, which takes its rise from a very small lake of the same name in the western part of the parish, runs through here in an easterly direction, receiving in its course the waters of the Mashie and Trium, both of which have their rise in the Grampians. Loch Laggan, a beautiful lake, extending about eight miles in length by one in breadth, lies on the south-west extremity of the parish. There are three places of worship in the parish—a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a Roman Catholic chapel; there are also two public schools. Acreage, 15C,106. Population in 1881, 917.

DALWHINNIE, which is surrounded with beautiful scenery and lochs, is situated on the heights of the forest of Badenoch, on the Highland road to Inverness from the south; it is 56½ miles from Inverness, and 99½ from Edinburgh.

ALVIE is a parish in the Badenoch district, bounded on the south by the Grampians, and on the west by Kingussie. The principal inhabited portions lie along the rivers Spey and Feshie. There are Established and Free churches, and a public school in the parish, which has an area of 86,615 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 707.

NEWTONMORE is a village in Kingussie parish.

MAIL.

To FORT WILLIAM, &c. from the Duke of Gordon Hotel, daily (Sunday excepted), at 1 p.m., arriving at 8 p.m.; returning from Fort William at 6 a.m., arriving at 12 20 noon—Hugh M'Donald, proprietor

PORTREE,

EIGG, RAASAY, RONA, BARRA, BRACADALE, DURINISH, HARRIS, GLENELG, KILMUIR, LOCHMADDY, NORTH AND SOUTH UIST, SLEAT, SNIZORT, STRATH, AND NUMEROUS SMALL ISLES.

PORTREE is a parish in the island of Skye. The village of Portree is the principal one in the parish of the adjacent isles, and is a flourishing little seaport, about 210 miles from Inverness by Oban, 131 by Beauly, Dingwall, and Strome Ferry, and 109 by Invermoriston and Shiel House, 74 N. from Tobermory, 21 E. from Dunvegan, and 24 N.W. from Broadford. It is reached by steamer from Oban, or by rail by Dingwall, Garve, Auchinault, Auchnasheen and Jeantown to Strome Ferry; and thence by railway steamer. The village is seated a little above the shore, at the summit of a somewhat steep acclivity, thickly planted with thriving trees. It is of some business, has three banking establishments, a woollen manufactory in the vicinity, and four good hotels and posting houses. In the mill, which was erected in 1850, are manufactured tweeds, plaids, yarns and carpets. The quay, erected in 1819, has not much depth at low water, but the tide rises from twelve to sixteen feet; the bay is safe and spacious, having a depth of from five to twelve fathoms, and the anchorage is excellent. On a high rocky promontory, projecting some distance into the bay, at whose base the quay is erected, stands an octagonal tower, built in 1834, by Dr. Alexander M'Leod, from which there is a splendid view of the surrounding scenery. On the west of the village, amidst some thriving plantations, stands Portree House, belonging to Lord Macdonald. A sheriff court is held every Thursday during session. The votes of the county electors in Skye for a member of Parliament for Inverness-shire are taken at Portree, Broadford, Uig and Dunvegan. The chief exports are sheep, black cattle, wool, salt herrings, salmon (chiefly for London), and cod and ling, both salt and dry, principally for Glasgow and Liverpool. The entire parish of Portree has an area of 56,909 acres, and contained a population in 1881 of 3,191.

SKYE is an extensive island on the western coast of Scotland, forming no inconsiderable portion of the county of Inverness, being the largest of the Western isles, with the exception of Lewis. It is forty-six miles from north to south, and twenty-seven from east to west in a direct line; but the parliamentary road, commencing at Armadale in the south, and running chiefly on the eastern coast to Uig in the north, is seventy-two miles long; and there is a cross road extending nine miles still further in the latter direction. The general face of the country is mountainous, which, although it may be inviting to the tourist from the sublime scenery it presents, is a great barrier to the successful operations of the husbandman; and the island cannot be called fertile, if we except the narrow strips of land in the valleys, and some parts near the coast. The eastern part of the island is separated from Glenelg, on the mainland, by a narrow sound called the Kyles of Skye. The island belongs to a number of proprietors, and is principally occupied in grazing farms, producing great numbers of sheep and black cattle, and some small horses, but a large portion of the land is rented by what are termed crofters, who combine farming and fishing for a livelihood. Recently an agitation has arisen among them for a thorough rivision of the terms on which they hold the land, the crofters going to the extreme measure of defying the law officers, supported by the military, who were enforcing the demands of the land owners. The agitation caused such a popular feeling on their behalf that a land bill, considerably in their favour, was passed by Parliment. This with the aid of emigration, will, it is hoped, do something to ameliorate their position. Formerly great quantities of kelp were made here. Eight miles south of Portree in the district known as "Macleod's country," may be contemplated some of the finest and most beautifully-varied mountain scenery in the Highlands. This part abounds with game; and lake and river angling may here be successfully pursued by the tourist, and refreshment and accommodation obtained at the Sligichan Inn, situated at the base of the celebrated Cuchullin (pronounced Coolin) Hills. Dunvegan Castle, once the princely residence of the chief of the Macleods, is distant 21 miles from Portree, but it is here noticed as one of the most ancient structures of the Highlands; it has been repaired and fitted up at a great expense. Not far from the castle is a convenient inn. In poceeding to Portree, from the south is seen, from the deck of the steamer, Armadale Castle the seat of Lord Macdonald, agreeably situated near the shore, at the south-east corner of the island, amidst thriving plantations and sheltering woods. The fisheries off this coast, especially in the sound between Syke and the mainland, are sometimes very productive. The coasts are indented with many fine and secure ports, the principal of which are Portree and Broadford on the east, the Isle of Orusay on the south, and Dunvegan and Stein on the north. The parish of Portree also comprises the isles of PLADDA, RAASAY and RONA.

The peculiar features of Skye are its romantic views, its mountain and water scenery, the charming seats with which the country is studded, as seen from different points, and some natural curiosities in certain localities. A particular notice of all the places worthy of of a stranger's visit would occupy more space than we could devote to the subject. We cannot however omit noticing the small lake of Cornishi, about ten miles south-west from Broadford, whose sides rise almost perpendicularly from its deep black waters to a great height; also a spar cave on the coast of Strathard; and about seven miles north of Broadford and Storr Rock is exhibited one of the most grand and imposing scenes in Scotland. This is a mountain seven miles north of Portree, whose summit is fully 2,000 feet above the level of the sea, the eastern side being a grand precipice of bare rugged rock, often rising perpendicularly 500 feet. But the most remarkable feature about it, and which renders it dissimilar to any other mountain, are several detached pyramids, or almost perpendicular columns of rock, varying from 300 to nearly 500 feet in height; some standing at a considerable distance from the mountain, and appearing as though the intermediate parts, being too soft to resist the influence that acted upon them, had crumbled away, leaving the harder materials as a monument of their ability to resist the ravages of time and raging of the tempest. One of these isolated spiral masses of rock rises 165 feet from the base, and is 240 feet in circumference; it seems at a distance to stand on an apex, from which one might imagine it would be easy to remove it; indeed, the spectator cannot divest himself of the apprehension that it would fall upon him should he approach too near. The scene is altogether grand and imposing, and must be visited to be appreciated. The fairs in Skye are held as follow:—Skye: May—Broadford cattle, Thursday after last Tuesday; Portree cattle, last Tuesday. August—Broadford cattle, Thursday after third Tuesday; Portree cattle, third Tuesday, Sligichan, Monday before Portree. September—Broadford cattle; Thursday after third Tuesday; Sligichan cattle, third Tuesday, North and South Uist: May—South Uist, Wednesday before Portree; North Uist, Friday before Portree. July—South Uist, Friday after Inverness sheep and wool market; North Uist, same day. September—South Uist, Wednesday week before Sligichan; North Uist, Friday week before Sligichan. By the census returns for 1881, the Island of Skye contained a population of 17,789, a decrease of 362 since 1871.

EIGG, or Egg, is a small island in the Hebrides, belonging to Inverness-shire, about 12 miles S.W. of the promontory of Sleat, the most southern point of Skye. It is about three miles long from north to south, surmounted on the southern extremity by a perpendicular wall or rampart called the Scuir of Eigg, composed of pitchstone porphyry columns, running about a mile in length nearly east and west, from 300 to 400 feet broad, and from 350 to 400 feet high, the summit being about 1,340 feet above the level of the sea. The Scuir is distinctly columnar, the pillars generally being about a foot in diameter, though there is a stratum of columns at the east end, inclining towards the horizon, whose diameters are from two and a half to three feet. The appearance of this singularly grand production of nature from every point is indescribably magnificent, and when viewed from the east end assumes the form of a stupendous ruined tower. At the base of the rocks, on the north and south sides, several large caves have been formed by the softer parts of the rock crumbling away; the bases of the columns above form the ceiling of these caves, and as in Staffa, presents a resemblance to the surface of honeycombs. Two steamboats pass here on their way to Portree, and return every week in summer. Population in 1881, 291.

RAASAY, or Razay, is an island of the Hebrides, belonging to the parish of Portree, about 13 miles long and two broad, lying to the east of Skye, opposite Portree, separated from it by the sound of Raasay, about four miles wide. It is the property of Mrs. Wood, of Raasay, who has a fine mansion in a bay near the south-western extremity of the island. There are other islands in the neighbourhood of Skye; as SCALPA to the east, RUM and CANNA to the south-west, &c. Population in 1881, 478.

RONA, or Ronay, is an island of the Hebrides, lying at the northern extremity of Raasay, from which it is separated by a strait just passable for vessels. It is about four miles in length by one in breadth. The little arable ground which occurs in Rona surrounds the scattered village which lies at the bottom of the bay, and contains nearly all the population of the island, who in 1881 numbered 176. There is a very fine lighthouse here.

BARRA is an island parish, in the south of the Western islands. It contains the post office village of CASTLEBAY, and includes the isle of BARRA, BERNERAY, FLODDAY, FRIDAY, HELLISAY, MINGALAY, PABBAY, SANDERAY, and WATERSAY. The island is about six miles long by a width of three, and contained in 1881 a population of 1,869.

BRACADALE is a parish in the isle of Skye, about 17 miles long by a width of about five miles; it also includes the isles of HAVERSAY, ORANSAY, SOAY, and VUIAY. The whole parish is the property of Macleod, of Macleod. Population in 1881, 929.

DURINISH is a parish in the isle of Skye, 17 miles long by a width of 13, including in its limits the isles of WATERNISH, STEIN, and ISSAY. Population in 1881, 4,319.

HARRIS is a parish in the south end of Lewis Island, in size about 20 miles long by a width of about eight. It includes the isles of ANABICH, BERNERA, ENSAY, FLODDAY, KILLIGRAY, PABBAY, SCALPAY, SCARP, SCOTSWAY, ST. KILDA, TARRENSAY, and other small isles. Post-town, Portree. Population in 1881, 4,814.

KINCARDINESHIRE,

OCCASIONALLY called the MEARNS (and improperly Mearn-shire) is a small county on the eastern coast; bounded on the north and north-west by Aberdeenshire, on the east by the North Sea, and the south and south-west by Forfarshire. Its form describes nearly that of a triangle, having to the sea its principal or most extensive base, which reaches along the coast from the bay of Aberdeen to the mouth of the North Esk river, about thirty miles; its greatest breadth inland being twenty-two. The contents of its area are stated to be 383 square miles, or 248,284 acres, of which about five square miles are foreshore, and three lake and water. In size Kincardine is the twenty-first of the Scottish counties, and in population the twenty-fifth.

NAME AND EARLY HISTORY.—The shire takes its name from Kincardine, formerly a small town in the parish of Fordoun, and which was the seat of the county courts, &c. until the year 1600, when they were removed to Stonehaven. Kincardine which has dwindled to a mere hamlet, was formerly connected with an ancient seat of royalty called Kincardine Castle, of which only the foundations of the walls can now be traced. The phrase Mearns, before referred to, after strict investigation, is in all probability merely of local meaning; but it is generally said to have been affixed to this part of Scotland from its having become the property of Mernia, a brother of King Kenneth II., another brother called Angus conferring his name upon the neighbouring county of Forfar. In former times the hollow of the Mearns was the only passable access to the north of Scotland, owing to the hills occupying uninterruptedly all the rest of the breadth inland, except at this point, and it was the common passage for armies going to and fro, since the earliest periods of history; yet, unless the great battle between Galgacus and Agricola took place here, as some historians aver, this county has not been the theatre of any extraordinary events, nor the scene of any great military achievements. The peasantry of the shire have always been considered a very able and industrious race of men; and the "men of the Mearns" is a proverbial expression of old date—implying trustworthiness and integrity.

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE, &c.—The county is almost exclusively of an agricultural character, for although it has the advantage of so extensive a range of sea coast, it possesses no harbour of any commercial importance. The soil of Kincardine is of a very productive kind, and is cultivated in a style nowhere surpassed in Scotland; a sufficient proof of this is the fact that of all the lands in tillage nearly a seventh part is devoted to the culture of the turnip. The other crops raised are wheat and beans, and small fields of rye are to be met with. Attention is also devoted to the feeding of cattle, and on the hills numbers of black-faced sheep are reared. The salmon fisheries yield a valuable rental, the fish being packed in ice and sent to the southern markets. The white or sea fishing employs many of the inhabitants, the species caught comprising whiting, cod, ling, halibut, turbot, soles, &c. Herring fishing is prosecuted during July and August, and is a source of much profit, many persons being employed in the curing of the fish. Manufactures as yet have not made much progress in this county, the principal being the making of woollens, flax and tow spinning, and net, rope and twine manufacturing. There are also one or two tanneries, breweries and distilleries. The county is destitute of both coal and marl, and there is very little limestone—all of which deficiencies bear hard upon agricultural improvement; these drawbacks, however, seem to have excited more strongly the spirit of enterprise amongst the agriculturists, who import lime in great quantities from other districts by means of the Firth of Forth. The limestone of the county obtained near the coast is burnt with coal, in the more inland parts with peat or wood; but from the scarcity of fuel, there is much more lime imported into than is wrought in the shire. In Arbuthnott parish, and near St. Cyrus on the sea shore, beautiful pebbles and jaspers are found. The coast is partly flat and partly rocky, and at the north-eastern corner of the county terminates the chain of the Grampians, where they form what is called the Girdleness, which presents to the sea a bold face of rock from sixty to eighty feet high. The chief mountains and eminences are Mount Battoch, 3,465 feet in height; Clacknabane, 2,370; Clairniemount, 2,000; Kerloch, 1,890; the Hill of Fare from 1,500 to 1,700; Scolty Hill, 1,500; and Strathfanella, a detached Grampian, from 1,200 to 1,500 feet above the level of the sea. The county in its more level parts is highly embellished by the country seats of its numerous resident proprietors, each amid its own thriving woodland.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—The most considerable rivers connected with this county are the Dee, the North Esk, the Cowie, the Bervie, and the Carron. The Dee glides for eight or ten miles through the northern limb of the shire; the North Esk is a boundary river on the south-west for about ten miles; the Cowie has a course of ten miles through the county, previous to its falling into the sea at Stonehaven, where also the Carron empties itself; and the Bervie, after a progress of sixteen miles, discharges itself into the sea at the town to which it imparts its name. The Luther water can only be mentioned as a tributary stream to the North Esk. The Caledonian railway, with several branches, passes through Kincardineshire, communicating on the north with the city of Aberdeen, and on the south with Edinburgh and various other places.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &C.—Kincardineshire comprises eighteen parishes and three parts of parishes; it contains within its limits a royal burgh—BERVIE, and a burgh of barony—STONEHAVEN, besides many other smaller towns and villages. Bervie, in conjunction with Montrose, Arbroath, Brechin, and Forfar, returns one member to the Imperial Parliament, and the county at large another. The present member for the county is General Sir George Balfour, K.C.B. The parliamentary constituency in 1888-89 is 5,662. The lord-lieutenant of the shire is Sir Thomas Gladstone, Bart. By the census returns of 1871 the entire county had a population of 16,784 males, and 17,846 females; total, 34,630; in 1881 the numbers stood: males, 16,978, females, 17,486; total, 34,464. The valuation of the county for 1888-89 is £222,345; railways, &c., £23,886; total, £246,231.

AUCHINBLAE AND FORDOUN.

AUCHINBLAE, the capital of the parish of Fordoun, is a thriving inland market town, pleasantly situated on the banks of the Luther water, 26 miles S. by W. from Aberdeen, 16 N. from Montrose, 11 S.W. from Stonehaven, six N.E. from Fettercairn, five N. from Laurencekirk, and two and a half W. from the Fordoun station on the Caledonian Railway. The principal trade of the place is flax spinning, by power, which was established so early as 1795, being the second attempt in Scotland. The weaving of linens by the hand-loom has been entirely given up. Branches of the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, and the Town and County Bank, Limited, are established here. A Savings Bank was commenced in 1815; it was converted into a National Security Savings Bank in 1842. The town was lighted by gas in 1840; but the service is now discontinued and paraffin oil used in substitution. A Public Hall was erected in 1870 by public subscription, at a cost of £500. In consequence of the salubrity and pureness of the air, and the many beautiful and romantic walks in the immediate neighbourhood, it is much frequented during summer by families from the sea-coast towns of Arbroath, Montrose, Stonehaven, and Aberdeen. A park of 75 acres, on the Drumtochty estate, close to the village has recently been opened to the public. In the western part of the parish, about a mile north-east from Fettercairn, is a small assemblage of tenements, being all that remains of the former county town, Kincardine, and among these or in their vicinity, stood the court house. It ceased to be the chief town in the reign of James VI., when Stonehaven, as a more convenient situation for holding the county courts, obtained that distinction. In the vicinity are the remains of the castle or royal palace of Kincardine. There are no records stating when this castle was built, or when it was last inhabited, but it appears to have been a royal residence previous to the death of Kenneth III., in 994, for it was occupied by that monarch at the time of his murder by Finella. It stands on the termination of a small ridge, at an elevation of about sixty or eighty feet above the adjoining plain, and has a very commanding view of the most beautiful part of the Howe o' the Mearns. It was in this palace, as Lord Hailes writes, that John Baliol resigned his crown to Edward I. of England, July 2nd, 1296, and he quotes the record of this in Rhymer's "Fœdera." As this is the last event of importance on record connected with this palace, it is not improbable that it was destroyed in the wars between the Scotch and English which followed that event. Near to Fordoun House are distinct vestiges of a Roman encampment; and on the hill above Newlands there are the remains of a Druidical temple. About a mile west of Drumtochty Castle, in a retired and secluded glen, are the foundations of a small friary; and near to that is a fine spring, considered to be among the most copious flowing in Scotland. The parish extends, from east to west, about ten miles, and in breadth about seven, and encloses an area of 26,869 statute acres. The southern part is level, but the north is mountainous, having a thin soil and inferior in fertility to the lower part. The present parish church, erected in 1829, and placed on a high rock in one of the most beautiful parts of the parish, is a large handsome edifice, in the Gothic style, with a tower on the west end rising to about one hundred feet in height; and in a valley between where it stands and the town of Auchinblae is situated the Free church, a neat well-finished building, but much smaller and of humbler pretensions than its more aristocratic neighbour perched on the rock. A market for the sale of cattle and grain is held at Fordoun station on each alternate Monday from October to the end of May; and fairs at Auchinblae for the sale of cattle and the hiring of agricultural labourers, on Wednesday after the second Tuesday of May (old style); the 27th of May (hiring); Paldy fair, cattle, first Thursday, horses, first Friday after first Tuesday (old style) in July; and on 23rd November (hiring). The population of the parish of Fordoun was in 1881, 1,992; of this number 411 were returned for Auchinblae.

BANCHORY-DEVENICK AND MARYCULTER,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CULTS AND PORT-LETHEN

BANCHORY parish lies on both sides of the river Dee, near its confluence with the sea, and is partly in the county of Kincardine and partly in that of Aberdeen, the river Dee being here the boundary. The parish, which is for the most part rugged, heathy, and stony, extends about six miles along the river, with one extremity bounded by the sea, and comprises an area of 10,040 statute acres. The parish church, which is situated on the south side of the Dee, is distant about four miles S.W. from Aberdeen. On the opposite side of the river, in this parish and four miles distant from Aberdeen, is the modern village of CULTS, containing a number of handsome villas, chiefly the residences of Aberdeen merchants, and which is a station on the Dee Side Railway. The parish also contains the small village of PORT-LETHEN, situated near the promontory of Girdleness, and now a quoad sacra parish and registration district, and a station on the Caledonian Railway. Population of the parish in 1881, 3,317.

MARYCULTER parish lies on the south side of the Dee, extending from that river to the Grampians, and is about seven miles S.W. from Aberdeen; it is of an oblong form, being six miles in length by two in breadth, and containing an area of 7,781 statute acres. The land adjacent to the river is partly low and fertile, but southward it is uneven and rocky and stony. The district is well wooded, and here and there are to be seen some thriving plantations. This parish appears to have been a favourite haunt of the Knight Templars. The Dee Side Hydropathic Establishment at HEATHCOT is a picturesque building, pleasantly situated, and distant five miles from Aberdeen. There is also a Roman Catholic college at BLAIRS. The population of the parish in 1881 was 1,072.

BANCHORY-TERNAN, DURRIS, AND STRACHAN.

BANCHORY-TERNAN is a parish lying on the banks of the Dee, further up the river than Banchory-Devenick. It is bounded by Durris on the east, Kincardine O'Neil on the west, Midmar on the north, and Strachan on the south. The river Dee is here crossed by an iron truss bridge (1798-1829) of 175 feet span, and three stone arches. The village, which was founded in 1805, stands on the north side of the Dee, at a distance of 18 miles south-west of Aberdeen. In 1885 it became a burgh by adopting the Police Act of 1862. It is governed by nine commissioners, with the usual officials under the Act. The parish church, which stands at the east end of the burgh, was erected in 1824; it is in the Gothic style of architecture, with a tower and clock, and is seated to contain 1,250 persons. The Free church, erected in 1880, at a cost of £3 000, upon land given by Sir Robert Burnett, Bart., in the centre of High street, is an imposing edifice of pink and white granite, in the early English style, with a tower 100 feet high, and an illuminated clock; it is seated to contain 700 persons. There are also places of worship belonging to the Episcopalians and the United Presbyterians. The Town Hall, a neat building erected in 1873, contains a large hall for entertainments, billiard room, &c. A public park was opened on the 3rd of August, 1887, the land for which (about 16 acres) was presented by the baronet above-named. It has been beautifully laid out, at a cost of about £800, and besides ornamental walks, &c. there is a large sheet of water, which in winter time is resorted to for skating and curling. In the parish are two or three lochs, one of which was some time ago drained and brought under cultivation. In the centre of it was an artificial island, built of oak, bearing the ruins of an old mansion or lake house. The supply of water to the city of Aberdeen is taken from the Dee, at the western boundary of this parish, about three and a half miles above the village of Banchory. The cattle shows of the Deeside Agricultural Society are held at Banchory in July of each year, and fairs are held on the last Monday in January and February, the last Thursday in March, the Monday before the 26th of May, 3rd Tuesday in June, 2nd Tuesday in July (old style), 2nd Tuesday in August, 1st Tuesday (old style) in September, and the 2nd Monday in November and December respectively of each year. The parish contains an area of 20,079 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population numbering 3,065.

DURRIS parish, which extends about eight miles in length, by three and a half in breadth, lies on the south side of the Dee, from which the ground rises, and terminates at the ridge of the Grampian mountains. A great part of the parish has been enclosed, and many improvements effected. The parish is bounded by Maryculter and Fetteresso on the east, and Strachan and Glenbervie on the west, the northern boundary being the river Dee, which is here crossed by a neat iron bridge, erected in 1862. Durris is about three miles distant from Banchory Ternan. There are several lofty mountains in this district. The area of the parish is 15,294 statute acres, and its population in 1881 was 1,014.

STRACHAN parish is bounded on the east by Durris, Glenbervie, and Fordoun, on the south also by the latter parish and Fettercairn, on the west by Lochlee, and on the north by Banchory-Ternan. It extends eleven miles in length by from seven to nine in breadth, contains an area of 41,672 statute acres, and is for the greater part a mass of hills, some of which belong to the range of the Grampians. Clochnabane, more than two thousand three hundred feet high, rises within the parish, the land of which is low towards the north, on which quarter it is bounded by the Dee, where it is tolerably well cultivated, and some of it planted. The river Feugh passes through this parish, forming a picturesque casacade at the bridge of Feugh, near to where it falls into the Dee at Banchory. Population of the parish in 1881, 694.

BERVIE,

WITH THE VILLAGES AND PARISHES OF GOURDON, ARBUTHNOTT, AND KINNEFF WITH CATTERLINE.

BERVIE (or INVERBERVIE, as it is frequently written), is a royal burgh, the capital of its parish, and chief town for many miles; 13 miles N. by E. from Montrose, 10 S. from Stonehaven, and 25 S. from Aberdeen; eligibly situated on the coast road from the last named city to Dundee, and at the mouth of the Bervie, which river is crossed by a good bridge of a single arch, spanning 103 feet. At the mouth of the river is a small basin which opens into an extensive bay, navigable for any vessel almost at any time. The basin could easily be converted into a very commodious and safe harbour, which would be the means of augmenting the general commerce of the place, and revive the fisheries on the coast. The principal trade of the town is the spinning of flax and the weaving of winceys, &c. Bervie is admirably adapted for the purpose of manufacture to any extent. The river is a fine stream, and in the driest season it has always abundance of water; it runs through a large valley, in which the first mill that was ever erected for spinning flax in Scotland stands. The town is well lighted with gas. The electric light has also been introduced into several of the public works. Bervie was constituted a royal burgh by charter from King David II. as a return for the kindness and hospitality with which he was received by the poor inhabitants, when he was forced in here by stress of weather; the place at which he landed is still called Craig David. James VI. renewed the charter, confirming all the privileges and immunities granted by David. The burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and nine councillors. It joins with Montrose, Arbroath, Brechin, and Forfar, styled the Montrose burghs, in returning one member to Parliament; John Shiress Will, Esq., is the present representative. The sheriff's small debt court, which used to be held in Bervie is now removed to Stonehaven. Registration courts are still held once a year.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment and a Free church. The first mentioned is a handsome modern building of Gothic architecture, and is the principal ornament of the town. The commerce of this place and adjoining villages is benefited by the railway (Montrose and Bervie line), effecting as it does direct communication between the two towns. The weekly market, a considerable one for grain, is held on Wednesday, and the fairs on the Thursday before the 19th of May and September. GOURDON fishing village is one mile from Bervie, and contains a population of 714. The parish of Bervie comprises an area of 2,332 statute acres, and its population was in 1881, 2,107; of this number 1,095 were returned for the parliamentary burgh.

ARBUTHNOTT parish is of an irregular triangular form, nearly five miles in length, bounded on the west by Fordoun, or the great hollow of the Mearns, the streams of Bervie and Forthy forming this line of division, and on the north-west by Glenbervie and Kinneff. The celebrated Dr. Arbuthnott, the intimate friend of Pope and Swift, was the son of the minister and a native of this parish. The present church of the Establishment is of very ancient date, and is said to have been founded as early as the thirteenth or fourteenth century. The part in use at the present time formed the nave of the old church. The chancel of the old building has for many years been used as the place of sepulture of the Allerdice family, and a small chapel adjoining, which was originally dedicated to the Virgin Mary, forms the burial place of the Arbuthnott family. The modern part was burned to the ground this year (1889), but it is pleasing to know that these interesting relics remain uninjured. Arbuthnott gives the title of Viscount to an ancient family of the same name, which became distinguished in the twelfth century. Sir Robert Arbuthnott, for loyalty to Charles II., was created a Baron and Viscount by that monarch. Acreage of the parish, 9,585; population in 1881, 809.

KINNEFF with which is incorporated the abrogated parish of CATTERLINE, lies on the sea coast south from Dunnotar, and is bounded by Arbuthnott on the west, and Bervie on the south. It extends from the water of Bervie to the northern point, about five miles along the coast, which is exceedingly bold and rocky. Upon the margin of the sea, not above 100 yards distance from the church, are to be seen the ruins of a castle, from which it is supposed the parish has taken its name; and tradition assigns it as having been the residence of a Scottish monarch named Kenneth. At Catterline, there is an Episcopal church, in connection with which there is a good school. Kinneff church is remarkable as being the place—in a hole under the pulpit—in which the regalia of Scotland were deposited, from 1651 to the Revolution. These valuable memorials of Scottish loyalty were ingeniously conveyed out of the Castle of Dunnotar, while besieged by General Lambert, by Mrs. Grainger, wife of the incumbent of the parish, and her servant girl. The parish encloses an area of 7,130 statute acres, and contained in 1881 a population numbering 997.

DRUMLITHIE AND GLENBERVIE.

DRUMLITHIE is a village in the parish of Glenbervie, 18 miles N. from Montrose, 7 N. by W. from Bervie, and about 6½ S. by W. from Stonehaven; situated nearly in the centre of the east side of the county, on the road from the last-named town to Laurencekirk, and is a station on the Caledonian railway. The village is an assemblage of ill-built houses, so perplexingly arranged as to constitute a bewildering labyrinth. The parish of Glenbervie extends upwards of 6 miles in length, by a breadth of 3 in some parts, and 5 at others; bounded on the W. by the Water of Bervie and Fordoun, on the E. by Dunnottar and Fetteresso, on the S. and S.E. by Arbuthnott, and on the N. by the hills of Strachan and Durris. The soil in the upper part of the district is of a bluish clay, and in the lower of a dry fertile loam, The northern portion of the parish lies partly among the Grampian Hills. The river Bervie bounds the district partly on the west, and the Carron has its source within it. The hamlet of GLENBERVIE, which stands in the vicinity of the former river, is a barony of the Douglas family. Free and Episcopal churches are in Drumlithie, and a church of the Establishment at Glenbervie. A fair is held on the first Thursday after the second Tuesday in October. The parish of Glenbervie contains 15,041 statute acres, and by the returns for 1881 had a population numbering 972.

FETTERCAIRN

IS a parish and village—the latter 98 miles N. by E. from Edinburgh, 12 from Montrose, 16½ from Stonehaven, 11 N. from Brechin, and 4½ N. by W. from Laurencekirk, situated on a small streamlet, a tributary to the North Esk. The latter river is crossed by a romantic bridge called the Bridge of Gannachy, which springs from a precipitous rock, at either extremity, and is elevated to a great height above the water. The village has the advantage of a branch of the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, and there is a large distillery in the immediate vicinity. In the village square is the old cross of Kincardine, an erection of great antiquity. About one mile west is a ruin called Fennella's Castle, connected with which is a singular tradition concerning the murder of Kenneth III. by a powerful lady named Fennella, in revenge for the death of her son, who was slain by that monarch, in rebellion. Besides the handsome parish church there is a Free church and an Episcopal church, and two libraries are maintained. At one end of the village stands a graceful arch, erected to commemorate the visit of the Queen and Prince Consort on the 21st September, 1861. The parish of Fettercairn lies at the foot of the lower range of the Grampians, and extends considerably into the Mearns; the ground on the west is light and sharp, with a small mixture of moss, on the east it becomes deeper and of a fertile clay loam. The name of the parish is derived from the said Fennella cairn or castle, and the eminences or morains in the vicinity. The parish encloses an area of 13,728 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 1,503; of this number, 398 were returned for the village.

JOHNSHAVEN, BENHOLM AND ST. CYRUS.

JOHNSHAVEN is a thriving seaport village in the parish of Benholm, 14 miles S.W. from Stonehaven, and 4 S.W. from Bervie, situated at the bottom of a hill between the coast road and the sea, and a litto off the main thoroughfare between Aberdeen and Montrose, 29 miles S. from the former town, and 9 N.E. from the latter. It contains an extensive manufactory for sail cloths, sackings, &c., and there is also a brewery in the village. The parish of Benholm forms a square of nearly three miles, enclosing an area of 4,891 statute acres, lying on the shore of the German Ocean, bounded on the north by Bervie, and on the south by St. Cyrus. The land is level on the coast, and the interior consists of hill and dale, and beneath the surface is deposited good freestone and limestone. The Tower of Benholm, before the invention of gunpowder, was considered a strong place of defence. The places of worship are the parish kirk, a Free church, and one for United Presbyterians. The Montrose and Bervie railway passes through the parish, and has a station at Johnshaven. The parish contained a population of 1,527 in 1881, of which number 1,041 were returned for Johnshaven.

ST. CYRUS, sometimes called Ecclesgreig, is a parish and village, the latter situated 4 miles S. from Johnshaven, between the coast and the road from Montrose, which passes through the district. The parish, which measures seven miles in length by three in breadth, with an area of 8,249 statute acres, lies partly on the seashore, having Benholm on the east, Garvock on the north, Marykirk on the north-west, and the North Esk river washes part of its western boundary. The places of worship are the parish and Free churches. There are two schools in the village, the public, and an excellent industrial school, built and endowed by the late General Straton, of Kirkside; this Peninsula and Waterloo here also left legacies for the poor of the district. The sea salmon fisheries along the coast of the parish are very valuable; the yearly rental amounting to about £2,500, and of the river fishings to about £750. The surface of the parish is pretty level, but intersected with several glens and rivulets, and is elevated in some places to little hills. More than three-fourths is arable. The burn in Den Fella forms a beautiful cascade by falling over a rock sixty-three feet in height. The ancient residence of the Barclay family, known by the name of the Kame of Mathers, stands in ruins on a peninsulated rock, the base of which is washed by the sea. The castles of Morphie and Lauriston are also ancient buildings. The parish contains limestone quarries and plenty of excellent freestone. St. Cyrus is a station on the Montrose and Bervie line. The population of the parish in 1881 was 1,487, of which number 542 were returned for the village.

LAURENCEKIRK,

MARYKIRK, GARVOCK, AND THE VILLAGE OF LUTHERMUIR.

LAURENCEKIRK, the capital of its parish and the chief town of the Howe, is a thriving and respectable place, 93 miles N. by E. from Edinburgh, 10 N. from Montrose, and 14 S.W. from Stonehaven, situated on the main road from Perth to Aberdeen, and is a station on the railway to that city. Formely a mere hamlet, seated amidst an uncultivated tract of country, it is indebted for the consequence it enjoys at the present day to Lord Gardenstone, a judge of the court of session, who, in the year 1772, took it under his fostering care and patronage. In 1779 he procured for the place the privileges of a burgh of barony, with the right of holding a weekly market. The town contains a main street nearly a mile in length, one parallel to it, and two or three short ones branching from the principal streets, the whole being well lighted with gas. It is governed by a bailie and four councillors, who are chosen every three years. A sheriff small debt court is held three times a year. Branches of the Town and County Bank, Limited, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, are established here. The parish, which is sometimes called Conveth, is four miles in length, and three at its greatest breadth. A ridge of hills stretches through the whole extent, from east to west, sloping gradually to the north and south; the small river Luther passes through the district, and numerous brooks intersect it. The name Laurencekirk is derived from the old parish kirk, dedicated to St. Laurence. Besides the Established church, there are Free and Episcopal churches and an Independent chapel. In 1866 a public hall was erected by public subscription, at a cost of some £1,400, called St. Laurence Hall. There is also a good brewery belonging to Mr. David Cameron. Fairs are held on the third Wednesday in January (St. Anthony's fair—old style), and cattle fairs on the last Thursday in April and Thursday after the third Tuesday in July (St. James's fair—old style), and the first Thursday in November (new style). Horse market on the Monday before the first Friday in March; cattle, horse and sheep, Thursday after second Tuesday in August (old style), and Monday before last Wednesday in September. Cattle and grain markets are held on every alternate Monday throughout the year. The parish of Laurencekirk has an area extending over 5,612 statute acres, and by the Government returns for 1881 contained a population of 2,045; of this number 1,454 were returned for the town.

The parish of MARYKIRK lies on the north bank of the North Esk, at the extremity of the Howe or Hollow of the Mearns, and is bounded by Garvock, St. Cyrus, and Laurencekirk on the east, Fettercairn and Fordoun on the north, and Fettercairn and the North Esk on the west. It is six miles in length and five in breadth, and embraces an area of 9,841 statute acres. The surface is level, and the soil, though various, is chiefly fertile. Some fine plantations ornament the district, which is interspersed with a few handsome seats. The parish contains two villages, LUTHERMUIR and MARYKIRK; the latter is situated on the road about half way between Montrose and Laurencekirk. The parish of Marykirk contained at the census for 1881, 1,461 inhabitants; of this number 383 were returned for Luthermuir.

The parish of GARVOCK lies south-east of Laurencekirk, its post town, which is about two and a half miles distant from the centre of the parish. Its length south-westward is fully seven miles, and its greatest breadth is about four miles, embracing an area of 7,966 acres. It is bounded on the south by Marykirk, on the west by Laurencekirk and Fordonn, on the north by Arbuthnott, and on the east by Benholm and St. Cyrus. The parish church, a plain building, situated about the centre of the parish, was erected in 1778. About two-thirds of the parish is under cultivation, and the work of reclaiming and improving is still in progress. A cattle and feeing fair, of four days in continuance (called St. James's fair) used to be held on the hill of Garvock, about half a mile from the church, and was for some time the most important in the county, but has greatly fallen off, and has been transferred to Laurencekirk. On the summit of Garvock hill there are two large Druidical cairns. The parish of Garvock had, in 1881, a population of 428.

STONEHAVEN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF COOKNEY, FETTERESSO, AND DUNNOTTAR.

STONEHAVEN (or Stonehive) is a seaport and the county town of Kincardine, 94 miles N. by E. from Edinburgh, 68 N.E. from Perth, 66 S.S.E. from Banff, 35 N. by E. from Arbroath, 23 W. from Montrose, 15 S. from Aberdeen, and 10 N.N.E. from Bervie. It is situated within a mile of a station on the Caledonian railway, on the coast of the North Sea, at the mouth of the Carron stream, in the bottom of a bay, and flanked on both sides by lofty hills. The place, which is considerable, though not a royal burgh, is composed of an old and new town; the former lies on the south bank of the Carron, adjacent to the harbour, in the parish of Dunnottar; the other on a peninsula, or angle, formed by the Carron and the Cowie, in the parish of Fetteresso. The two towns are connected by a bridge, forming a continuation of the road from the south to Aberdeen. The new town is laid out on a regular plan, having broad streets, with a square in the centre, in which stands a good market house, erected in 1827, surmounted by a handsome spire 130 feet in height. The new town hall, in Allardice street, which stands opposite the market house, was erected in 1878, at a cost of £4,000, by public subscription, and is vested in trustees. It is a fine building, and contains news, billiard and reading rooms. The harbour is a natural basin, sheltered on the south-east by a high rock which projects into the sea, and on the north-east by a quay that affords every facility for loading or unloading vessels. The shipping of the port is chiefly employed in the coal and lime trade, and occasionally in exporting grain to Leith. During the season herring fishing is carried on to the great advantage of the place. The celebrated Glenury Distillery is in the vicinity, and the manufacture of woollens is extensively carried on, besides which there are a tannery, a brewery, and several net and rope and twine manufactories. There are three banking houses, two savings banks, and several good inns. The sheriff's ordinary court is held every Wednesday in time of session, and a sheriff's small debt court on the same day during the sitting of the first-mentioned court. A newspaper, the Stonehaven Journal, is published here every Thursday.

The Established churches of Dunnottar and Fetteresso are situated near the town; there are also Free, United Presbyterian, and Episcopal churches, and a Roman Catholic chapel. There are three cemeteries in close proximity—namely, at FETTERESSO and COWIE, one mile and a half respectively from the town, and at DUNNOTTAR, one mile distant. The principal object that can awaken interest in the vicinity of Stonehaven is Dunnottar Castle, about a mile and a half south of the town; it is seated on a perpendicular rock, one hundred and fifty feet above the level of the sea, about three acres in extent, and almost separated from the land by a deep chasm. The entrance is by a square tower of great strength, within high water mark; the skeleton of the structure still occupies one-half of the summit of the rock, and forms one of the most majestic piles of ruins in Scotland. This castle withstood a long siege by Cromwell's army, and its ultimate surrender was upon honourable terms; it was often used as a state prison, and several of the nonconforming Presbyterian clergy were compelled to be its inmates. It was built during the contest between Bruce and Baliol, by an ancestor of the Marischal family. It was dismantled shortly after the civil war of 1715, when its proprietor, James, Earl Marischal, was attainted for high treason; since that period (the direct line of succession having failed) the castle became by purchase the property of the nearest heir male, Sir Alexander Keith, of Dunnottar and Ravelston, Knight Marischal of Scotland, and is now the property of Sir Patrick Keith Murray, Bart., of Auchtertyre and Dunnottar. Though dismantled, the stonework of the fortress is yet pretty entire, there being in general nothing wanting excepting the roofs and the floors; the battlements, the formidable towers and airy turrets full of loopholes for the archer and musketeer, the hall for the banquet and the cell for the captive, are all alike entire, and their respective limits and divisions distinct. It was in this castle, during the Commonwealth, that the regalia of Scotland was placed, which was afterwards conveyed away and secreted under the pulpit in the parish church of Kinneff. The regular weekly market is held on Thursday, and there is another for cattle and grain on that day from Martinmas to Candlemas. Fairs: May 25th, for hiring servants: on the third Thursday in June, the second Thursday in August (old style), for cattle; November 21st, for hiring servants, and the Thursday before Christmas Day (old style), for cattle. The population of Stonehaven was in 1881, 3,957.

DUNNOTTAR, anciently spelt Dunnoter, is a parish of an irregular form, the eastern side running from Stonehaven to the south, a distance of five miles, and from thence about five miles north; abutting on the parishes of Kinneff and Glenbervie, from thence descending to the Carron Water at the base of that hill, where Dunnottar and Glenbervie are met by the parish of Fetteresso. The principal object of interest in the parish is the castle previously mentioned, within the walls of which formerly stood the parish church; the seaward boundary of the parish is a continuous chain of rocks and cliffs containing many caverns, one of which extends more than 150 yards, which render Dunnottar one of the most romantic places on the east coast. The old town of Stonehaven is in this parish, near to which is situate the parish church. The parish embraces an area of 7,783 acres, and in 1881 had a population numbering 2,448.

COOKNEY, erected a quoad sacra parish and registration district in 1859, was taken from the northern side of Fetteresso. The parish church, which is about central, is 5 miles N.N.W. from Stonehaven, and about a mile from the village of SKATERO. It is bounded on the west by the parish of Durris, on the north by Maryculter and Banchory-Devenick (that part known as the quoad sacra parish of Port-Lethen), on the east by the German Ocean, and on the south by Fetteresso: it is about 6 miles long from west to east, and 4 miles broad, the soil along the coast being well cultivated and fertile, but there is much barren land to the west. Most of this was at one time common, but it was divided among the neighbouring heritors, and is now under cultivation and much improved. At MUCHALLS is a coast-guard station, and a station on the Scottish North-Eastern railway: and here fairs are held on the first Tuesday in May for cattle and horses; Tuesday before second Wednesday in June, first Tuesday in August, first Tuesday in October (o.s.), for cattle and horses. There are two fishing villages, SKATERO and STRANATHRO, in the parish. Population in 1881, 1,976.

FETTERESSO is a parish about 10 miles in length, and between 5 and 6 in breadth, enclosing an area of 27,245 statute acres. It is bounded on the south by the parish of Dunnottar, on the west by Glenbervie, Durris and Maryculter, on the north by Maryculter and Banchory-Devenick, and on the east by the German Ocean. The northern part of the parish is Cookney, now created a separate parish for ecclesiastical and registration matters. The principal streams are the Carron and Cowie, which run from west to east; the former divides the parish from Dunnottar for about five miles, entering the sea at Stonehaven; the latter has a similar course and termination. Fetteresso Castle is the seat of R. W. Duff, Esq. M.P., and was once the ancient abode of the Earls Marischal, but since rebuilt and extended. The new town of Stonehaven is in this parish, near to which is the parish church, also the village of COWIE, one mile and a half distant, which contains a cemetery. The parish contained in 1881 a population of 5,541.

KINROSS-SHIRE.

THIS is a small inland county, situated on the western boundary of Fifeshire, towards its south-western quarter, from which it was severed in the year 1426; Fife also bounds it on the southern side, and Perthshire lies on its northern and western limits. At the Revolution, Kinross being considered too small a county as it then stood, was enlarged by the addition of Orwell, Cleish, and Tulliebole, which parishes before that period formed a portion of Fifeshire. The general figure of the county is somewhat circular, although the line of its boundary is very irregular. It extends from east to west about thirteen miles; and from north to south about twelve miles. The total superfices of the county amounts to seventy square miles of land, and seven of lakes; of cultivated land about 27,700 acres, and of uncultivated about 18,400 acres. This is the smallest of the Scottish counties except Clackmannan, and in population numbers the least. Its name is significant of its local situation, importing the "head of the peninsula."

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE, &c.—The boundaries or outskirts of the county are generally hilly; and the shire may be described as an open vale or plain, environed by uplands and hills. The Ochil hills, which separate the district from Strathearn, are the northern boundary; the Lomond hills are the eastern; Benarty hill the south-eastern; and Cleish hills the south and south-western. These eminences are generally adapted for pasture and the rearing of cattle; but they are likewise in several places suited to cultivation, and exhibit many pleasing and productive arable fields. The original condition of Kinross resembled that of the contiguous county of Fife, having been of a moory, mossy nature. Up to a comparatively recent epoch the lands were bleak and unreclaimed—a circumstance partly attributable to a certain local characteristic—namely, the district has the remarkable peculiarity in its proprietary of being much divided into farms, each owned in feu by its tenant; there are, in consequence, more resident lairds in proportion to its extent in this part of the country than are to be found in any other division of Scotland. The farms, it appears, were feued about the commencement of the eighteenth century from the house of Kinross to the tenants then in possession, whose descendants inherit the properties, paying for them an exceedingly trifling duty or quit-rent. The marches of the various farms not having been accurately defined, and being more confused by the practice of "runrig," it was long before the county manifested any very active signs of improvement. Within the recollection of persons still living, few districts were worse cultivated or less profitable than Kinross-shire; but the prime minister Pitt's institution of rack-rent taxation, in conjunction with other circumstances (among which undoubtedly may be included the good example exhibited by neighbouring agriculturists), ultimately induced a spirited change; and now the progress of agriculture—the mode of draining, enclosing and planting—can compete with those of Fife and most other districts. Drainage, on an extensive and effectual system, has been carried into operation on the Carse, east from Loch Leven, and on its margin; in all directions in this particular quarter, productive arable fields present themselves, where, only comparatively a few years ago, nothing met the view but desolate moors and sombrous mosses. Oats, barley, and peas are the crops chiefly cultivated, but great attention is paid to the growing of turnips and potatoes. At this day many good roads intersect the shire; and various parts of it are sheltered by thriving, comfort-inspiring plantations. The manufactures of the county are only of moderate importance, and consist chiefly in the weaving of linen fabrics, and the making of plaids, tartan shawls, and other woollen goods. The mineralogy of Kinross-shire is a subject of limited importance. Coal abounds in some localities, and works for raising it have been established on the Blairadam estate; whinstone has been found in several parishes, so has freestone and sandstone of the best quality; and of limestone there is plenty.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAYS.—There are no rivers of magnitude in this county; the only ones that can be named are the Gairney on the southern boundary of Kinross parish; the South Queich, that runs below the town of Kinross; and the North Queich, on the northern boundary of the parish—all which, and a few rivulets besides, discharge themselves into Loch Leven. This beautiful and noble expanse of water (which we shall have to notice particularly under Kinross town) lies at the east end of a wide vale, and nearly in the centre of the county; the small river Leven issues from it, and pursues an easterly course through Fifeshire. Besides Loch Leven there are a few small minor lakes, or (as they are properly termed) tarns, on the eminences above Cleish. On the Fife and Kinross branch of the North British Railway there is a station at the town of Kinross; also one on the Devon Valley branch of the same railway, and on the completion of the Forth Bridge, Kinross will be on the direct route from Edinburgh to the north.

Kinross-shire comprises only four complete parishes, and three parts of parishes; it possesses only one town, Kinross—with a large populous village in its neighbourhood, called Milnathort. The county, which has no parliamentary burgh, joins with Clackmannanshire in returning one member to the Imperial Parliament; the present representative being the Right Hon. John Blair Balfour, Q.C. The parliamentary constituency in 1888-89 numbered 1,432. The Lord Lieutenant is Sir Graham Graham Montgomery, Bart. According to the census returns for 1871, the county contained a population of 3,390 males, and 3,808 females; total, 7,198; the figures given in 1881 were: males, 3,112; females, 3,585; total, 6,697 showing a decrease of 501. The valuation of the county for 1888-89 (including railways) is £62,748.

KINROSS AND MILNATHORT,

WITH ORWELL, FOSSOWAY AND TULLIEBOLE, CROOK OF DEVON, ARNGASK, DAMHEAD, PORTMOAK, AND CLEISH.

KINROSS, the capital of its county and parish, and a burgh under the Police and General Improvement Act, is a town of considerable antiquity. It is 27 miles N. from Edinburgh, 19 S.W. from Cupar-Fife, 17 S. from Perth, and 10 N. from Dunfermline, which last named town is approached by a branch line of the North British railway. The town occupies a pleasant site at the foot of the open vale to which it gives name, on the north-western shore of Loch Leven. It formerly consisted of a number of sinuous lanes, composed of buildings of antique appearance, bordering on the lake; in later times it has undergone many extensive improvements in the erection of new houses, particularly in the main street, through which is the road to the north. In this street are the principal inns and shops. There are two woollen spinning mills in the town, and shawl weaving is carried on. As Kinross is the capital of the county, the courts of the sheriff sit here every Tuesday during session, and occasionally during vacation; justice of peace courts are held as required. The County Buildings, in which the courts are held, is a handsome edifice, erected in 1826, at a cost of £2,000; a police station has since been added. A Town Hall was built by subscription some years ago, on the site of the old parish church, but being found too small for many purposes, a more commodious structure was built in 1868. The places of worship are the parish church, a handsome Gothic erection, of modern date; a Free church, two United Presbyterian churches, and an Episcopalian church; the latter, dedicated to St. Paul, is a very neat edifice of Gothic architecture, erected in 1875. There are also two public schools, which are large and commodious. The Kinross-shire Advertiser newspaper is published here. In the vicinity of the town, on a promontory jutting into Loch Leven, is situated Kinross House, a structure designed and built by Sir William Bruce, the architect of the modern part of Holyrood House, and many other mansions, in the style of the time of Charles II. The environs of the town derive much of their beauty from the pleasure grounds and exuberant plantations around this edifice, which stands near the northern entrance to the town, and opposite to the island and castle of Queen Mary, on Loch Leven. This noble sheet of water is twelve miles in circumference, and contains four islands, the largest of which occupies nearly a hundred English acres; upon this latter stood the ancient priory of St. Serf (or St. Servanus), of which only a fragment now remains. On another stand the ruins of the castle of Loch Leven, once the seat of the Douglasses, and in recent times rendered celebrated by Sir Walter Scott in his novel of "The Abbot." Here the unfortunate Queen Mary was imprisoned. The spot where the Queen landed upon her escape from the island castle, May 2nd, 1568, has been variously stated. There seems, however, to be good reason for believing that it was in the neighbourhood of the churchyard. In corroboration of this is the finding, in 1805, of a number of keys, supposed to be those thrown into the loch when the queen made her escape; also the discovery of eight small keys of antique make in the same bearings, but nearer to the castle. The first mentioned are now in the possession of the Earl of Morton, the others being in the Antiquarian Museum of Edinburgh. A fine walk by the water is much resorted to in good weather. The loch is stored with trout of a red colour and first rate quality, and eels, perch, pike, &c. The excellent sport obtained, and the other attractions of the locality draw a yearly increasing number of visitors. The fishing season begins on the 1st January and closes on the 31st of August. Rod fishing begins generally in April, for which there is an ample supply of boats on the loch. The North British Railway Company have two stations in the town, one at the junction of the Fife and Kinross and the Devon Valley railways, by which lines communication is open to Ladybank, Alloa, and Stirling; the other station (Loch Leven) is on a branch line which runs to Cowdenbeath, and there joins the company's line between Dunfermline and Thornton. On the completion of the Forth Bridge, Kinross will be placed on the direct railway route from Edinburgh to Perth, a new line being now in course of construction, leading from Kinross to Perth, through Glenfarg. There is also a station at Balado, on the Devon Valley branch, 3 miles from the village of Cleish, and about 2½ from Kinross. At the hamlet of TILLYOCHIE, in the parish, and 3 miles distant from the town of Kinross, there is a woollen spinning mill. A county market, principally for the sale of corn, is held in Milnathort on Monday, and an auction mart for the sale of live stock has also been established there. Fairs are also held on the fourth Monday of March, second Monday of June, fourth Monday of July, and fourth Monday of October all for cattle, horses, and sheep; and there are hirings on the fourth Monday in July, and Thursday after second Tuesday in October. The parish of Kinross contains an area of 7,275 statute acres, and at the census taken in 1871 had a population of 2,477, and in 1881, 2,492; of this number 1,960 were returned for the town.

ORWELL is a parish situated to the north of Kinross and Loch Leven. It is of an oblong form, its greatest length from east to west being 7½ miles, and its greatest breadth from north to south about 2½ miles. It is bounded on the north by the parishes of Forgandenny and Arngask, on the east by Strathmiglo and Portmoak, on the south by Fossoway and Kinross, and by Fossoway on the west. The greater part of Orwell is fine arable land, well enclosed and planted. On the low ground, towards the lake, stand the ruins of the ancient castle of Burleigh, formerly the residence of Lord Burleigh.

MILNATHORT, popularly designated Mills o' Forth, is a considerable village in the parish of Orwell, one mile and a half N.E. from Kinross. It is neatly built, and is one of the most thriving and industrious villages within the county. It is a station on the Fife and Kinross branch of the North British railway. Adjoining the station is the Kinross-shire Auction Mart, and being the only one in the county, has become a very important medium for the disposal of live stock; weekly sales take place on Monday, and there is also a corn market held on the same day. The government of the village is carried on by a committee of the inhabitants. In the centre of the village is the public hall, which is one of the chief ornaments, being surmounted by a spire, with a clock. There are three places of worship—the parish church, a Free church, and a United Presbyterian church. The latter is a handsome Gothic building, with a spire 125 feet high; it was erected in 1868, at a cost of £3,000. Another ornamental building deserving of notice is a school erected by the liberality of James Brand, Esq., of London, in memory of his father, who was a native of the village. There is also a public school. The inhabitants are principally employed in woollen shawl (hand-loom) weaving. There are also a spinning mill and a linen power-loom factory, which find employment for a number of hands.

MIDDLETON, DALQUIECH, and SEGGIE are hamlets of the parish, from 1 to 2 miles distant from Milnathort. The Mawcarse station, on the Fife and Kinross branch of the North British railway, is in this parish, about 2 miles distant from Milnathort. Acreage of Orwell parish, 13,183. Population in 1881, 2,031, of which number Milnathort contained 1,269.

FOSSOWAY and TULLIEBOLE is a united parish in the west of Kinross-shire. In shape it is very irregular; the area is about 50 square miles, a portion being occupied by the eastern extremity of the Ochils. It is bounded on the north by Dunning, on the east by Orwell and Kinross, on the south by Cleish, Torryburn, and Saline, and on the west and north-west by Clackmannanshire and Muckart. Fossoway is partly in the county of Kinross and partly in that of Perth, the latter county embracing the greater part of it. Fossoway and Tulliebole were formed into one parish about the year 1614. The parish has two small agricultural villages, named CROOK OF DEVON and BLAIRINGONE, and the hamlets of POWMILL and CARNBO. Besides the parish church at Crook of Devon there is a quoad sacra church at Blairingone, and also a Free church in the parish; and there are also public schools.

About two miles from Crook of Devon, following the course of the river, and about seven from Kinross, is the celebrated Rumbling Bridge, and a little further on is the equally famous Cauldron Linn. The scenery in the neighbourhood of this fall is such as is not often met with, and since the opening of the Devon Valley railway the locality has become much frequented by tourists. CROOK OF DEVON and RUMBLING BRIDGE are stations on the Devon Valley railway. Acreage, 17,333. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,267.

ARNGASK is a parish lying partly in the three counties of Kinross, Fife, and Perth, and DAMHEAD, its village, is partly in each, situated on the highway to Perth, and is 6½ miles distant from Kinross. The form of the parish is nearly circular, and it is about four miles in diameter. The country here is hilly, and more pastoral than arable. The Farg, dividing the Perthshire portion of the parish from the others, together with other streams in the vicinity, afford good sport to the angler. The beautiful scenery in the valley of the Farg is justly admired. The new direct line of railway from Edinburgh to Perth, via the Forth Bridge, is now in course of construction, and it is anticipated that there will be a station at Damhead. The parish contains an Established church, a Free church, and a public school. The nearest stations are Gateside and Mawcarse, on the Fife and Kinross railway, both distant about three miles from Damhead. Acreage, 6,450. Population in 1881, 547.

PORTMOAK is a parish lying round the east of Loch Leven. It is bounded on the north by Strathmiglo, on the east by Leslie, and Kinglassie, on the south by Auchterderran and Ballingry, and on the west by Kinross and Orwell. Like Fossoway its outline is irregular; length from north-west to south-east nearly 6½ miles, greatest breadth 3½ miles; embracing an area of 9,957 statute acres. It contains the villages or hamlets of BALGEDIE, KINNESSWOOD, and SCOTLANDWELL, situated respectively about four and a half, five, and six miles east of Kinross, the inhabitants of which are employed in agriculture and weaving. Bishophill, the western peak of the Lomonds, is in this parish, and occupies a large portion of the area in the north-east. This hill is 1,150 feet above Loch Leven and 1,492 feet above sea level, and contains lime and freestone. Wells of pure water are numerous on the west side of the hill, and in one place, near Scotlandwell, there are three, with a copious flow of water, not far from each other. Andrew Winton, the chronicler of Scotland, was a native of this parish; and it was for twenty-eight years under the charge of the Rev. Ebenezer Erskine, one of the founders of the Secession church. The village of Kinnesswood is also famous as the birth-place of Michael Bruce. The house in which the poet was born, and in which he died, has been restored. There are three places of worship in the parish—the parish church, a Free church, and a United Presbyterian church, the two former situated between Kinnesswood and Scotlandwell, and the latter at Balgedie; there is also a public school in the parish. The nearest stations are Mawcarse, on the Fife and Kinross railway, about two miles north-west of Kinnesswood and three from Scotlandwell; and Leslie in Fifeshire, on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee section of the North British railway, a mile farther distant in the opposite direction. Population in 1881, 1,042.

CLEISH is a parish of an oblong form, stretching east and west. Its length is about 6 and its breadth about 2 miles. It is 2 miles from the town of Kinross, and Kinross parish forms its northern boundary. On the east it is bounded by Ballingry, on the south by Beath, and on the west by Dunfermline and Fossoway. A range of hills, called Cleish hills, runs along the western end of the parish, affording fine pasture for sheep. The rest of the soil is under tillage, which is the chief employment of the inhabitants. There are quarries of fine freestone in the parish, and coal is extensively wrought on the estate of BLAIRADAM, which occupies a large part of this parish and of Beath and Dunfermline, and is the seat of Sir Charles E. Adam, Bart., son of the late Right Hon. William P. ADAM, who for some time was member of Parliament for the united counties of Clackmannan and Kinross, and, at the time of his death was governor of Madras, India. The villages are CLEISH, 4 miles from Kinross, where the parish church and public school are situated, MARYBURGH, 4½ miles, and KELTY BRIDGE, 5 miles distant. The Blairadam station, on the Kinross-shire branch of the North British railway, is in this parish, 3 miles distant from Kinross. Acreage, 6,201. Population in 1881, 498.

KIRKCUDBRIGHTSHIRE,

COMMONLY called a STEWARTRY, but in reality to all intents and purposes a sheriffdom or shire, lies on the south of Scotland, and forms the eastern and by far the most extensive portion of the ancient district of Galloway. It is bounded by Dumfries-shire on the east and north-east; on the south by the Solway Firth and the Irish Sea; by the county of Ayr on the north and north-west, and by Wigtownshire (or Western Galloway) and Wigtown bay on the west. In extent it measures, from south-east to north-west, about forty-four miles, by a breadth varying from twenty to thirty miles, the narrowest part being on the north and towards its north-western limits; it comprises a superficies of 954 square miles, or 610,348 statute acres. About one-half of the whole surface may be said to be brought into cultivation. This shire in point of size is the tenth, and in population the twentieth of the counties of Scotland.

EARLY HISTORY.—It appears that the denomination of "Stewartry" originated at the period when, by forfeiture of the possessions of the Baliols, the Cummins, and their various vassals, this district became the property of the Crown, when it is understood to have been first put under the authority of a royal STEWART; in subsequent times the office of stewart, in the appointment of the king, was one of much honour, and was often the subject of contest. For a considerable lapse of time, however, after the establishment of a separate stewartship, the district was still in some measure esteemed to be politically attached to Dumfries-shire, but this nominal connection was formally dissolved before the civil wars in the reign of Charles I. From the force of ancient usage, the appellation of steward, instead of that of sheriff, has, down to the present day, been popularly continued, although, by the civil arrangements of modern times, there is not the least difference in the two offices. Events in early times, possessing considerable interest, are more immediately connected with Kirkcudbright, its capital, which was frequently visited by, and occasionally became the abode of, royalty. Edward I. spent some time there during the warfare of 1300; and in 1455 it was visited by James II. in the course of his march through Galloway. A few years later, in 1461, Henry VI., with his queen and court, fled thither after his defeat at Towton; and in 1508 James IV. was hospitably entertained in the town.

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The soil of the county is principally composed of a thin mould or a brownish loam mixed with sand, and is incumbent sometimes on gravel, and in many places on rock; the whole surface is interspersed with meadows and mingled with moss. The shire has no statistical sub-divisions, except that four of the most northerly parishes—Carsphairn, Dalry, Kells, and Balmaclellan—are commonly designated the district of "Glenkens." The aspect of the country, however, forms a very natural distinction into two divisions; if a line be drawn from the centre of Kirkpatrick-Irongray parish to Gatehouse-of-Fleet, all to the north-west, with little exception, is so mountainous that it may with propriety be termed a Highland district; while the south and east parts exhibit a fine champaign and cultivated country—a contrast strikingly obvious. The principal eminences in the shire are Criffell (or Crawfell), 1,800 feet; Cairnsmuir, 1,728 feet; Blencairn, 1,200 feet; and Cairn, 1,000 feet above the level of the sea. Anciently the greater porportion of the land was covered with a forest, which is now eradicated, or to be traced only in trifling remnants on the banks of the streams. It appeared that, so early as the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, this hilly territory was under a productive process of agriculture, originated and improved by the assiduity of the monks of the different abbeys in the district; and it is upon record that in the memorable year 1300, when Edward I. subdued Galloway, he caused considerable quantities of wheat to be exported from the harbour of Kirkcudbright to Cumberland, and even to Dublin, to be manufactured into flour, in which state it was brought back to victual the various strongholds and castles held by that monarch. In these times the staple products where wheat and oats, the culture of barley, peas, and beans being very limited. This age of agricultural prosperity was succeeded by destructive intestine wars, fanaticism, improvidence, and consequent misery, which lasted 400 years, and reduced the country to a desert. It was not until the beginning of the eighteenth century that any measures were adopted to form a resuscitation of its agricultural capabilities, which for so long a period had lain dormant. The enclosure of the land with fences was the first attempt of a series of improvements; but this judicious preliminary was encountered by a riotous opposition from the rural population, who rose in considerable numbers, under the title of "levellers," and proceeded to demolish the newly-formed boundaries, under the influence of some extravagantly wild notions as to a natural general right in property; and they were not subdued until the most energetic measures were employed for that purpose. This mischievous result of ignorance having been overcome, however, and the "levelling" delusion dissipated, the county steadily advanced in an accelerated degree of improvement; and towards the close of the same century the district could compete with Dumfries and other adjacent shires in agricultural prosperity. Planting has been introduced by several noblemen and gentlemen of the stewartry, and much has been accomplished in reclaiming moss lands. The chief crop is oats, but wheat, barley, beans, turnips and potatoes are also cultivated, though not to the same extent as the first named. The number of horses, cattle and sheep reared in the county is moderately large, but the Galloway breed of horses has given way to others of a larger and stronger variety; while for dairy purposes the Ayrshire cattle are gradually superseding the black Galloway cow. Sheep and swine have, however, considerably increased in numbers. The district is very nearly destitute of coal, which, as well as the greater part of the lime used, is brought from Cumberland, and there is very little freestone. Marl is found in great plenty, especially in the loch of Carlinwark, which contains an inexhaustible store of the best shell marl. The mineral wealth of the county consists chiefly in its granite, which is extensively wrought in the neighbourhood of Dalbeattie and Creetown, and for the polishing of which there are works at both places. Besides the salmon fishings at the mouths of the rivers, the Solway Firth affords every opportunity for the capture of the inhabitants of the deep. The manufactures are of small value, and consist principally in the making of woollen goods.

RIVERS, RAILWAYS, &C.—Like other mountainous countries, this is intersected by numerous streams, which, uniting, form four considerable rivers; these are—the Dee, the Ken, the Cree, and the Ure. The Ken is considered the largest, receiving in its course numerous rivulets which drain the neighbouring hills, and even affording an asylum to the waters of the Dee, although the latter assumes the appellative privilege after entering the Ken. All these rivers rise in the north, and empty themselves into the Solway Firth or the Irish Sea. The smaller streams are the Fleet, the Tarf, the Deogh, and the Cluden. The Solway Firth, in a circular form, washes the coast of the stewartry, from the Nith to the Cree, a space of forty-five miles; and along the shore of this beautiful estuary the coast is bold and rocky, the cliffs in some instances rising to a great height. The principal towns in the county are now connected with the north and south by means of the Glasgow and South-Western Railway from Dumfries to Kirkcudbright, and the Caledonian line from Castle Douglas, on by Parton and Creetown to Stranraer and Portpatrick.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &C.—The shire, or stewartry, comprises twenty-eight parishes, and contains two royal burghs—Kirkcudbright and New Galloway; the latter, in conjunction with Stranraer, Wigtown and Whithorn (in Wigtownshire), formerly sent one member to Parliament, but on the passing of the Redistribution of Seats Bill, 1885, these towns were included in the counties to which they belong. The county returns one representative, the gentleman at present sitting being Mark J. Stewart, Esq. In 1888-89 the parliamentary constituency numbered 5,690. The Lord-Lieutenant is Lord Herries. From the census returns for the year 1871, it appears that the county of Kirkcudbright contained a population of 19,497 males, and 22,362 females; total, 41,859. In 1881 the figures given were: males, 19,807, females, 22,320; total, 42,127; showing an increase in the ten years of 268. The valuation of the county for 1888-89 is (exclusive of royal burghs) £347,396; railways, £18,966.

AUCHENCAIRN AND DUNDRENNAN IN RERRICK.

AUCHENCAIRN is a quoad sacra parish in the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, the village being eight miles south from Castle Douglas, ten east from Kirkcudbright, and twenty-one south-west from Dumfries, situated on the main road between the two last-named towns. It is much frequented during the summer months for its excellent bathing. Mines of barytes, copper and ironstone were at one time worked here with success. In the village are two hotels, which afford excellent accommodation to tourists and visitors. In the mouth of Auchencairn bay lies the small island of HESTON, which stands high out of the water, and affords excellent pasture for sheep, and there are rabbits in great numbers.

DUNDRENNAN is a small village in the parish of Rerrick, four and a half miles from Auchencairn, deriving its only importance from having in its vicinity the ruined Abbey of Dundrennan, the greatest attraction in this part of the country. This abbey, the venerable remains of which stand about a mile and a half from the sea, was founded by Fergus, Lord of Galloway, in the year 1142. The church was built, as usual, in the form of a cross, with the spire at the intersection rising two hundred feet. The nave and chancel were one hundred and twenty feet in length, and on the south side of the church were the cloisters enclosing a grass plot. The buildings are greatly delapidated, and are almost entirely covered with a pale grey-coloured moss, which gives a character of peculiar and almost airy lightness to the lofty columns and Gothic arches, many of which are entire. The existing ruins testify to the admirable taste and architectural beauty the building, when complete, must have displayed. The sacred edifice afforded a temporary shelter to Mary Stuart during the last hours she spent in Scotland. Tradition has traced with accuracy her course from Langside to the scene of her embarkation for England. She arrived here in the evening, and spent her last night within the walls of the monastery, then a magnificent and extensive building. The spot where she took boat next morning for the English side of the Solway is at BURNFOOT, the nearest point to the coast. It is situated in a little creek, surrounded by vast and precipitous rocks. The scene is analogously wild and sublime; and beside being inspiritive of melancholy associations in the mind of the poet or romantic tourist, the coast here and in the neighbourhood merits the attention of the painter and the investigation of the mineralogist. The entire parish of Rerrick embraces an area of 19,980 acres, and contained a population in 1881 of 1,807 of this number 441 were returned for Auchencairn.

CASTLE DOUGLAS IN KELTON,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BRIDGE OF DEE, KELTON HILL, GELSTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CASTLE DOUGLAS is a modern, neat, and thriving town and burgh of barony in the parish of Kelton, parochial union and Commissary Court of Kirkcudbright, the town coinciding with the quoad sacra parish of the same name, 90 S.S.W. from Edinburgh, 18 W. by S. from Dumfries, 15 N.E. from Gatehouse, and 10 N.N.E. from Kirkcudbright; situated on the road between Gatehouse and Dumfries, in a pleasant, fertile district, on the banks of the Carlinwark water, from which loch the original name of the place was derived. It is a station on the Castle Douglas and Dumfries line of railway. In 1792 it was erected by the proprietor into a burgh of barony by its present appellation, and its government vested in a provost, two bailies, and seven councillors. At the beginning of the century it was composed of but a few detached houses; it has now a large number of respectable dwellings, laid out in regular streets, the principal one lining the public road. Altogether, Castle Douglas may be considered one of the most respectable and prosperous market towns, although not of remote origin, in the south of Scotland. The Town Hall, a handsome structure, situated in St. Andrew street, is built of red sandstone, at a cost of £1,500. In connection with it is a Mechanics' Institute and reading room; and a court is held quarterly for the recovery of small debts, and a police court on the first Wednesday in each month. In the town are branches of the Bank of Scotland, the British Linen Company Bank, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited. A National Security Savings Bank, established in 1840, is a flourishing institution, and has been the means of doing much good. A newspaper published weekly, the Kirkcudbrightshire Advertiser, has a good circulation in the district. On the south-west side of the town are the ruins of the ancient castle of Threave; and on the south-east stands the modern and elegant mansion of Gelston Castle. Carlinwark loch, before mentioned, is upwards of a mile in length, and occupies one hundred and eighteen acres; before it was partially drained, however, by the canal cut from it to the river Dee, its area was much greater. It contains a number of small islands, and is plentifully stored with pike and perch. Two miles S.W. from Castle Douglas is Kelton parish church. It is a plain structure, with a belfry. The church is capable of accommodating about 550 persons. There are two Free churches in Castle Douglas, one with a red sandstone steeple, in King street, and the other situated in Queen street. Near Carlinwark loch stands the Castle Douglas parish church, a building of Gothic architecture, built in 1868 and enlarged in 1881. It has accommodation for 720 worshippers. There is also a United Presbyterian church, and the Roman Catholics have a commodious chapel. The Episcopal church, which is dedicated to St. Ninian, is a handsome granite structure, in the early English style of architecture. There are two public schools, and one female school under private management in Castle Douglas. The principal public school, a neat building with small tower, erected in 1877, is situated near the top of Cotton street. Castle Douglas and its vicinity appears to have been the arena of much contest during the feudal system, when the ancient Douglases dwelt in the castle of Threave, and were lords of the district; for on the west side of the town are still visible encampments and breast works, evidently thrown up against the castle; and on the south-west bank of the loch is a spot still termed the "gallows lot," or "plot," said to have been the place of execution in former times. Near the head of the lake lived, it is said, a blacksmith named M'Kim, or M'Min, and his sons; they made the large cannon called "Mons Meg," shown at Edinburgh Castle; it was formed in staves, and hooped round like a cask. The market (a large one) for grain in winter, and cattle in summer, is held on Mondays. Fairs: February 13th, or the following Monday, for horses; the last Monday in March, for hiring servants; September 23rd, or the following Monday, for hiring and for horses, and November 15th, or the following Monday, for horses. The civil parish of Kelton comprises 11,222 statute acres, and contained in 1881 a population of 3,458, the town of Castle Douglas having 2,565 of that number.

KELTON HILL, or Rhonehouse, is a small village in the parish of Kelton, and about two miles and a half from Castle Douglas. The extensive horse fairs formerly held here have been transferred to its more fortunate neighbour, Castle Douglas.

Nearly two miles from Carlinwark loch, in Kelton parish, is the small village of GILSTON or GELSTON, and its castle, formerly called Douglas Castle, and then the seat of the proprietor, Sir William Douglas, the founder of Castle Douglas, and now the residence of Captain Charles L. Maitland-Kirwan.

BRIDGE OF DEE is a small village and a station on the railway between Castle Douglas and Kirkcudbright, about 3 miles from the first-mentioned town.

CREETOWN,

PALNURE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CREETOWN is a small burgh of barony, in the parish of KIRKMABRECK, and union of Kirkcudbright, 117 miles S. W. from Edinburgh, 12 W. from Gatehouse, about 6 S. E. from Newton-Stewart, and 20 N. W. from Kirkcudbright. It was formerly called Ferry Town of Cree, and derived that appellation, doubtless, from its situation—the town being situated on the east side of the creek of the river Cree, at the head of Wigtown bay, and opposite the peninsula on which stands the town of Wigtown. It is a place of but little consequence as connected with commerce, the only trade it possesses being confined to the exportation of granite, which is worked by the Mersey Docks and Harbour Trust, and by Messrs. G. and J. Mossman, of Glasgow. The Waverley Hall, in St. John street, was erected by Thomas Adair, Esq., and is used for meetings, concerts, &c. Lead and copper have been found in the hills above the town, and at PALNURE, three miles distant; but the workings have been abandoned. The old mail road from Portpatrick to Dumfries passes through the town, and there is a station on the Portpatrick railway, within a mile distant. This place is the property of Mrs. Isabella Grant, whose mansion is a great ornament to it; and there are some other handsome residences in the neighbourhood. The Established and United Presbyterian churches are neat structures; and the Roman Catholics have a place of worship here. The parish of Kirkmabreck embraces an area of 28,031 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 1,834, of which Creetown possessed 979.

CROSSMICHAEL,

GREENLAW, PARTON, AND CORSOCK.

CROSSMICHAEL is a parish and village in the parochial union of Kirkcudbright. The village is a small one, 91 miles S.S.W. from Edinburgh, 19 S.W. from Dumfries, and 9 S.S.E. from New Galloway, pleasantly situated on the banks of the Dee, which river is crossed, about a mile and a half from the village, by an elegant stone bridge, over which passes the high road leading to Laurieston and Castle Douglas, Crossmichael being distant five miles from the former, and three and a half from the latter. In the village is the parish church, the patron saint of which, prior to the Reformation, was St. Michael, and hence the name, though of the cross there are neither remains nor traditions preserved. The parish lies nearly in the centre of the stewartry, having the Urr water on the east, and the Dee on the west. Two small lakes, which have an outlet to the Dee water, furnish good perch and pike fishing. In this parish is GREENLAW, formerly the residence of Robert, fourth Viscount Kenmure, who died in 1663 at the old fortress of Greenlaw, the remains of which still exist. Robert Gordon, son of William, sixth Viscount Kenmure, who was beheaded on Tower Hill, 24th February 1716, succeeded to the estate in 1737; and finding the old tower in a very dilapidated condition, he commenced the erection of the present house, which he had not completed when he died, on the 10th August, 1741. From that time the estate of Greenlaw continued in the possession of the Gordons till 1880, when it was conveyed by sale to John Ross Coulthart, of Ashton-under-Lyne, in the county of Lancaster, banker. Since the death of Mr. Coulthart, the estate has been in the hands of trustees. Besides the remains of the old fortalice of Greenlaw, there are also in this parish the foundations of a large monastery, of which even tradition has not preserved the name, though it is said that the superstructure was removed to furnish materials for erecting the old castle of Threave, which stands at a very short distance. The Barony Isle of the river Dee is said to have been a consecrated spot in the days of the ancient Britons, where the Druids had a temple in the midst of a grove of oaks, from whence they administerd sacerdotal rites, and offered up human sacrifices. There is also pointed out in this parish a Roman burying place, several Pictish cairns, in which human bones have been found; and instances of British encampments, near which stone weapons of various descriptions have been discovered. The parish of Crossmichael encloses an area of 9,919 statute acres, and contained in 1881 a population numbering 1,333.

PARTON parish lies along the banks of the Dee, that water being its western, and the Urr its eastern, boundary; it extends from six to seven miles in length, its breadth varying from four to six, and embraces an area of 15,841 statute acres. A large portion of this parish is hilly, healthy, and pastoral, especially in the northern quarter; towards the Dee the land is flat and arable, and under cultivation. What may be called the village contains but a few houses. The church (a neat building erected in 1834) and the manse are about three miles from Crossmichael. The latter occupies a very pleasant situation fronting the river, and is surrounded by hills and wood. There are some handsome residences in this parish, among which may be mentioned Parton House, and Airds House. The population of the parish was in 1881, 716.

CORSOCK, formerly in Parton parish, is now a parish of itself, for ecclesiastical purposes only. Population in 1881, 611.

DALBEATTIE,

BARNBARROCK, BUITTLE, COLVEND, DOUGLAS HALL, HARDGATE, HAUGH-OF-URR, KIPPFORD, PALNACKIE, ROCKLIFFE, AND SOUTHWICK.

DALBEATTIE is a burgh and quoad sacra parish, locally in the parish of Urr and of union Kirkcudbright, 87 miles s.s.w. from Edinburgh, 13½ N. by E. from Kirkcudbright, the like distance s.w. from Dumfries, and six from Castle Douglas, most eligibly situated on the Dalbeattie Burn, a rivulet which falls into the Water of Urr, which latter is here navigable for vessels of 150 tons. The harbour which is called Duh-o'-Hass, is about five miles from the Solway Firth. A line of railway from Dumfries to Portpatrick, Castle Douglas and Kirkcudbright passes through this place, and possesses a station here. The burgh has great advantages in respect to situation for a maritime trade, having a communication by sea with the western ports, and, by means of the before-mentioned railway, with many large inland towns; it possesses some large falls of water, capable of turning any kind of machinery. Paper, bobbin, and corn mills, and two for sawing timber are in operation, the whole propelled by water. Extensive granite quarries, granite polishing and granolithic works are in this neighbourhood, worked by Messrs. D. H. & J. Newall, Messrs. Dods & Craig Brothers, Messrs. Fraser & Young and others; and near the port are manure works and brick and tile works, the machinery of which is propelled by steam. In the town are places of worship for Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Evangelical Unionists and Roman Catholics. There are also a mechanics' institute and reading room, conservative and liberal club rooms, public, female and Roman Catholic schools, a branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, four comfortable inns and a fine bowling green. About four miles north-east from Dalbeattie is Corra Castle, formerly the residence of Lord Herries, but now the property of the Maxwells, of Terregles. It is a fine ruin, and mentioned as the place where Mary Queen of Scots passed a night on her way for embarkation at Solway Firth to England, after the battle at Langside Moor. The government of the burgh is vested in nine commissioners, who are elected by the ratepayers of the three wards into which the burgh is divided under the General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, 1862. The town is lighted with gas. The parish of Urr contains an area of 15,426 statute acres, and in 1881 the population was 5,490, of this number 3,865 were returned for Dalbeattie.

PALNACKIE (or GARDEN), is the principal village in the parish of Buittle, parochial union of Kirkcudbright, 18 miles s.w. from Dumfries, 14 N. from Kirkcudbright, and six S. of Castle Douglas, agreeably situated on the Water of Urr, where there is a good harbour, having at ordinary spring tides a depth of 30 feet of water, and capable of receiving vessels of two hundred tons burthen. Since the extension of the railway system in the Stewartry, the fishing trade has greatly fallen away. It used to be the chief port for supplying the surrounding neighbourhood with coal and various other sea borne necessaries. The parish is bounded on the east by Urr, on the south by Solway Firth, and on the west by Kelton. It is a fertile and agricultural district, eight miles in length and three in breadth, and contains an area of 11,391 statute acres, with a population in 1881 of 991.

COLVEND is a parish adjoining Kirkbean. It is entirely agricultural, and is only remarkable for its scenery. Along the coast of Colvend and Southwick there are several large caves, and three of the hills in the united parish exceed 1,300 feet in height. There are also several large heaps of stones, one of which, near Craigenuk Point, is called "Coulthart's Cairn," and is supposed to be connected in some way with the ancient Galloway family of Coulthart, of Coulthart. KIPPFORD, ROCKLIFFE and DOUGLAS HALL are favourite bathing places, to which families from all parts of Scotland and England resort during the summer months. The parish has an area of 18,666 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,281.

HAUGH OF-URR is a picturesque village, agreeably placed on the Water of Urr, about three and a half miles from Dalbeattie. In the neighbourhood are a waterfall called Spottes Lynn, a ferruginous well, and a romantic glen, interesting to the botanist and geologist. On the bank of the river, about a mile from the village, is the Moat of Urr, an artificial mound, surrounded by elevated circles and supposed to have been used in primitive times as a court of judicature. There is a comfortable inn here—the Laurie Arms. About half a mile from Haugh is the small village of HARDGATE.

GATEHOUSE-OF-FLEET,

AND PARISHES OF GIRTHON AND ANWOTH AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

GATEHOUSE, is a neat modern town, partly in the parish of Anwoth, but chiefly in that of Girthon, and stewartry of Kirkcudbright, 105 miles S.S.W. from Edinburgh, 50 miles E. of Portpatrick, 33 S.W. from Dumfries, and 8 S.W. from Kirkcudbright; charmingly seated in a romantic and fertile vale, embosomed within hills and lofty eminences, which form a spacious and delightful amphitheatre. Some of the hills have their sides clothed and their summits crowned with woods, interspersed with rich pasturage. The town is well built, regular and clean, the houses being generally of the same height, the streets running in straight lines and crossing each other at right angles. In High street stands a square tower of grey granite, 75 feet high, which had its origin in a sum of £30, left by Andrew Findlay, watchmaker, in 1867, for the purpose of erecting a public clock. During the four succeeding years this sum, by local subscription, was increased until it amounted to £300, at which cost the tower was erected. The fine clock by which it is surmounted was supplied by Messrs. Gillett and Brand, of Croydon, at a cost of £160, and was presented to the town by H. G. Murray-Stewart, Esq., of Broughton. A public hall has been erected in High street, at a cost of £1,400, obtained by public subscription. It contains a very fine oil painting by John Faed, R.S.A., of Ardmore, representing a charmingly picturesque view of the town, the old castle, and Rutherford's monument, with the hills and sea in the background. A good stone bridge crosses the Fleet, connecting the principal part of the town with that in Anwoth parish. At the foot of High street flows the river Fleet, which here meets the tide, and becomes navigable for vessels of 60 tons burthen. The navigation of the river was considerably improved by the late Mr. Murray, who, at a cost of £3,000, cut a canal in a straight line, which, besides deepening the river, reclaimed many acres of land, since which a commodious quay has been constructed. The exports of Gatehouse are principally grain, timber, and wood, and its imports lime and coal. There are some saw mills propelled by water power. Mines of lead and copper were some years since wrought to advantage; specimens of copper from the Enrick mine, shown at the Exhibition of 1851, were pronounced to be the richest in Europe. An attempt is now (1888) being made to form a company to re-open these workings. Gatehouse was erected into a burgh of barony in 1795, through the interest of the late Mr. Murray. The town council consists of provost, two bailies, and four councillors; the municipal government is vested in the Commissioners of Police. The parish church, which is a commodious building, was erected in 1817. The Free church is a spacious and handsome building, and contiguous to it is a church for the United Presbyterians. A masonic lodge, a library, and a reading room well supplied with newspapers and periodicals, have their respective members and supporters. Barlay Mill, a short distance from Gatehouse, is the birthplace of the brothers James, John and Thomas Faed, the well-known artists. In this neighbourhood, in the parish of Anwoth, are the ancient castles of Rusko and Cardoness. There are traces of three Roman encampments in the parish of Girthon, and two in the parish of Anwoth, all within a radius of two miles. Rusko castle, now in ruins, is the reputed castle of the "Young Lochinvar," of Scott's ballads. On a hill near the town stands a plain stone monument or column, erected to the memory of Samuel Rutherford, the divine; it overlooks the church where he preached, and where, after service on Sunday, the members of the congregation used to play football and other games. The column first erected was struck and thrown down by lightning, in 1847, and the present structure was built soon after. There is excellent hotel accommodation in the town, the chief of which is the Murray Arms, and it was here that Burns wrote "Scots wha hae." The market day is Saturday, the cattle markets on second Saturday, monthly; and the fairs are held on the Saturday before the 29th of June and the last Saturday in September. The parish of Anwoth encloses an area of 11,774 statute acres, and that of Girthon 33,374 acres. In 1881 the former parish had a population numbering 728, and the latter 1,415; of these numbers, 1,286 were returned for the town of Gatehouse.

KIRKCUDBRIGHT,

WITH THE PARISHES OF BORGUE, TONGLAND AND TWYNHOLM, AND THE VILLAGE OF RINGFORD.

KIRKCUDBRIGHT is a royal burgh, the capital of the stewartry, a parish, and in the parochial union of the same name, 100 miles S.S.W. from Edinburgh, 55 E. from Portpatrick, and 28 S.S.W. from Dumfries. Some authorities derive the name from the ancient features of the locality Caer Cuibricht, meaning the fort, or castle, in the place of entaglement, the country at that early date having been very swampy. Others trace it to St. Cuthbert, the name, probably, having been Kirk Cuthbert, which has become corrupted to its present form. The town occupies a peninsula and situation on the east of the Dee, about six miles from the confluence of that river with the Solway Firth, and is of considerable antiquity; but of its origin there is no authentic record further than that St. Cuthbert's church was erected so long ago as about the eight century. The establishment of this church was followed by the construction of a small fort by the lords of Galloway, which in after times was superseded by a castle in the proprietary of the Crown, by whose authority the place was put under the government of a constable. During the domination of the Douglases in Galloway, Kirkcudbright became a burgh of regality under their influence; on their forfeiture, James II. erected the town into a royal burgh by charter dated at Perth, 26th October, 1455. This grant was renewed and confirmed by Charles I., on the 20th July, 1633, and the burgh has since been under the government of a provost, two bailies, and thirteen councillors, with a treasurer and chamberlain; it joins with Dumfries, Annan, Sanquhar and Lochmaben in returning a member to Parliament. The revenue of the corporation is considerably increased by the salmon fishings in the Dee and the rents of three farms in the neighbourhood; and the town derives a certain degree of consequence and advantage from being the seat of the Stewart and Commissary Courts. Kirkcudbright at the present day presents an aspect remarkably pleasing. Within, it is regular, clean, and neat, and externally it appears embosomed in the bountiful foliage of a fine sylvan country. It is composed of six or seven distinct streets, at right angles with each other; the houses, which are for the most part two storeys high, have a respectable and comfortable appearance, and bespeak the taste and easy circumstances of the inhabitants. The Sheriff Court House was erected on the site of the old Stewartry building, under the Sheriff Court House Act, at the joint expense of Government and the county. It has a very imposing appearance. The exterior is in the castellated style, with battlements and a projected tower in the centre, which harmonizes well with the tower of the old building behind; the interior has been fitted up in a manner at once elegant and substantial. On the ground floor are the offices of the procurator fiscal, the county and justice of the peace clerks' office, and police office; the second storey contains the court room, seated for 150 persons, and several other offices. The cost of the building was £3,583. From the old tower above mentioned, an extensive view may be obtained of the beautiful environs of the town, including the ivied ruins of the ancient castle of Kirkcudbright, built about 1630, by Maclellan, one of the Lords Kirkcudbright. The former gaol and court house is a very curious old edifice, with the market cross on the outside stair leading to its tower, and is supposed to date from about the middle of the sixteenth century. The prison erected for the Stewartry has been closed, the prisoners sentenced at the Kirkcudbright courts being incarcerated at Maxwelltown. The building was purchased by the Roman Catholics, who demolished it, and erected on its site a convenient and substantial structure, consisting of a chapel and school, dedicated to St. Cuthbert. The monetary transactions, which are considerable, are conducted by three banks, viz., the Bank of Scotland; the National Bank of Scotland, Limited; and the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited. The burgh has a little shipping trade and a productive fishery. The shops and inns are very respectable; of the latter the Royal and the Commercial are the principal. The harbour is the best in the Stewartry; at the ordinary spring tides the depth of water is thirty feet, and at the lowest neap-tides eighteen feet. The river is navigable for two miles above the town, to the Tongland bridge, built by Telford, and which is constructed of one arch of one hundred and ten feet span. A handsome iron bridge has been erected across the Dee at Kirkcudbright, at a cost of £10,000, raised partly by a bazaar and partly by assessment. It is of the bowstring lattice construction; its length being 500 feet by 23 feet broad, consisting of five fixed spans of 71 feet each, and a compound span of 98 feet, which latter turns on a cast iron cylinder filled with concrete, to allow of the passage of vessels of considerable burden, beyond the bridge. The piers, over which stands a square column, furnished with a tripod lamp-stand and globular lamps, are clustered columns, with fluted capitals, four of the columns being surrounded by an entablature, the whole forming a bridge of the most graceful description, and admirably suited by its irregular contour for the position in which it is placed, being at once in harmony and contrast with the surrounding picturesque scenery. The approaches are formed by curved parapets of cast iron, to which are affixed a copy of the old seal of Kirkcudbright, together with the names of the provost, Mr. Samuel Cavan; the chairman of the bridge committee, Mr. Murray-Stewart, of Cally; and the engineers and contractors. The work of construction was commenced in May, 1865, and the bridge was opened to the public, together with the new court house above described, with a great demonstration on July 8th, 1868. Previous to the erection of the bridge, passengers and carriages had to be ferried over in a flat-bottomed boat; in stormy weather, however, or when their was an excessive current, this mode of conveyance was not without danger. The railway to Castle Douglas is a branch of the Glasgow and South-Western railway, and gives ample accommodation to the district.

The Established church, with nave and transepts, and a tower surmounted by a spire, was erected in 1836. It is a very tasteful structure, built wholly of stone, and stands in the centre of a plantation, through which are public walks. A portion of the ancient church still remains, and is used as a school. It contains a monument of a former Lord Kirkcudbright, a recumbent figure of whom is in fine preservation. The Free church (of which the foundation stone was laid in August, 1872, and which adjoins the Johnstone Free school) is a handsome building of whinstone, with red sandstone facings, erected on the site of the former Free church. It has a square tower, surmounted by an elegant spire reaching to the height of 122 feet. The east and west ends are ornamented with elegant windows, with fine tracery. The church is 82 feet long by 48 wide, exclusive of transepts, with seats for 712 persons. A complete set of halls and offices is connected with the church. The cost of erection was upwards of £5,000. In St. Cuthbert street stands a handsome church, opened in 1880, in which the United Presbyterian congregation worship. It cost £3,300, raised by public subscription, and has accommodation for over 400 persons. In the rear of the church is a hall used for the Sunday school and church purposes. The Town Hall, an elegant structure of freestone, in the Grecian style of architecture, was erected in 1879, at a cost of £5,300. The Town Council voted £2,500, the remainder being obtained by a bazaar and public subscription. It contains a library, reading room, museum, and lecture hall. The old United Presbyterian church has been converted into the Mackenzie Hall (founded by Mr. John Mackenzie, of this town), and is used for lectures, concerts, &c. The academy, or grammar school, is a plain, old-fashioned edifice. The Johnstone Free school is a chaste stone building, with centre wings and ahandsome tower. The environs of Kirkcudbright are truly delightful; the rising grounds on each side of the river from Tongland to the sea are embellished with thriving plantations; and the general prospect, both marine and inland, is really lovely. St. Mary's Isle, a beautiful spot, a mile from the town, was the seat of the late Earl of Selkirk, but is now the residence of the Hon. Charles Hope. The burgh is amply supplied with all domestic necessaries, and provions are comparatively cheap. The market day is Friday. The parish of Kircudbright extends over an area of 12,280 statute acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 3,346, and in 1881, 3,179; of this number 2,571 were returned for the town.

TONGLAND or TONGUELAND is a parish in the union and stewart court of Kirkcudbright. A parish church and a public school are her . Acreage, 9,738. Population in 1881, 829.

TARFF (for Gatehouse) is a station in the parish of Tongland, on the Kirkcudbright branch of the Glasgow and South-Western railway.

RINGFORD or RED LION is a small village in Tongland parish, situated on the road between Twynholm and Castle Douglas, about five miles from Kirkcudbright.

TWYNHOLM is a parish and village; the latter, a small one, is situated four miles from Kirkcudbright on the main road from Gatehouse to Castle Douglas. The soil is fertile, and the surface of the district rises into many small hills, partly arable. Of the extensive woods with which this part of Galloway was formerly covered, the only remains now existing are around the old castle of Compstone, a building pleasantly situated on an eminence nigh to the junction of the rivers Dee and Tarff. The village contains a small neat church of the Establishment and a public school. Acreage, 10,484. Population in 1881, 681.

BORGUE is a parish and village, forming the west side of Kirkcudbright bay, entirely agricultural. The village, a small one, about five miles distant from Kirkcudbright, consists of a few neat houses, and contains a Free church and a church of the Establishment, also a public school. The island of Ross, which rises at the mouth of Kirkcudbright bay, belongs to this parish, and on it has been erected a lighthouse. Acreage, 13,531. Population in 1881, 1,129.

KIRKPATRICK-DURHAM,

CROCKETFORD, OLD BRIDGE OF URR, AND SPRINGHOLM.

KIRKPATRICK-DURHAM is a parish and village—the latter a small one, is 85 s.s.w. from Edinburgh, 14 s.e. from New Galloway, 18 w. from Dumfries, seven E. from Parton, and five and a half N. from Castle Douglas. The parish, which is skirted by the Urr water on its western side, derives its name from the old church, dedicated to St. Patrick, and Durham, a hamlet where it stood—the latter appellation signifying "the hamlet on the water." The church is in the Gothic style, with a tower, erected on the site of the old church, and built two centuries ago; there is also a Free church. Formerly a woollen mill furnished employment to many inhabitants of the village; but it is now undistinguished by manufactures of any kind, and it is a place of no trade but that which belongs to a few shops for the accommodation of the inhabitants. The parish, which is between nine and ten miles in length, and about four in breadth, encloses an area of 18,277 statute acres, partly pastoral and partly arable, the former character prevailing in the north, the latter in the south of the district. In 1881 the parish contained a population of 1,317; of this number 484 were returned for the village.

CROCKETFORD (or NINE-MILE-BAR), a small village about three miles from Kirkpatrick, on the road from Dumfries, was founded towards the close of the last century by a sect known as the Buchanites, who believed that they would never die, and under the guidance of their leader, Luckie Buchan, they were to be translated in a body to the New Jerusalem. Near this village is situated Auchenreoch Loch, a sheet of water about a mile in length; and on Larg Hill is a monument commemorative of the Covenanters who perished in defence of their principles.

OLD BRIDGE OF URR is a small village in the parish of, and two miles from, Kirkpatrick-Durham, seated on the banks of the Urr water, and contains but few houses, and, with the exception of a small woollen manufactory, no business worthy of notice.

SPRINGHOLM is a small village one mile from Kirkpatrick, on the road from Dumfries. It contains a small chapel, built about the year 1806, by the Cameronians; and there is a woollen manufactory in the neighbourhood.

LAURIESTON,

GLENLOCHAR AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LAURIESTON is a small village in the parish of BALMAGHIE, 5 miles W. from Dumfries, 10 N. from Kirkcudbright, the like distance S.S.E. from New Galloway, and 7 N.W. from Castle Douglas. On the north-west the village is skirted by a mountainous district, which abounds with various kinds of game; in the east the land is more fertile. The parish has several small lakes, and a number of mineral springs; among the latter Lochenbreck Well. The principal proprietors are Richard Dunning B. Cunninghame, Esq. William Kennedy Laurie, Esq., J.P., of Woodhall, and Graham Hutchison, Esq., of Balmaghie House. Three miles to the east stands the parish church. A Free church is in the village. The parish of Balmaghie contains an area of 21,069 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population numbering 924.

On the road from Castle Douglas to Laurieston about 3 miles from the former place is the small hamlet of GLENLOCHAR.

NEW ABBEY,

BEESWING, CARSETHORN, KIRKBEAN, KIRKGUNZEON, LOCHRUTTON, MAINSRIDDLE, PRESTON MILL, SOUTHERNESS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

NEW ABBEY is a parish and village in the union of Kirkcudbright, The village, a small one, is 80 miles S. from Edinburgh, 12 E from Dalbeattie, 80 W.N.W. from Kirkcudbright, and 7 S. by W. from Dumfries, situated at the eastern extremity of the county near to the mouth of the Nith. The parish, which was originally called Kirkinder, takes its name from the once celebrated religious establishment of New Abbey, a monastery founded in the thirteenth century, for the Cistercian order of monks, by Dovergilla, daughter of Allan, Lord of Galloway. The ruins, which occupy an area of two hundred and forty by one hundred and fifty feet, are supported on arches and Gothic pillars, and the area is used as a burying ground. The extreme outer walls, or precincts, are traced to an extent of fourteen acres. On the north and south lie the woods of Shambellie, and on the south Loch Kinder and the dark braes of Criffel, the lofty hill of which rises to the height of 2,030 feet above the sea, from which it is a mile distant. Besides that of Kinder, there are two other lakes in the parish, namely Lochend and Craigend. Near the former is the spot where one of the early covenanters of this district met an untimely end. The parish kirk, which was built with part of the materials of the abbey, is situated on the north side of the ruins. On the Glen hill, a continuation of the Criffel range, stands a monument, erected in commemoration of the battle of Waterloo. It is fifty feet high, with a winding stair within, the base bearing an inscription laudatory to the British troops and their allies. BEESWING is a small hamlet in the parish, situate about 6 miles N.W. of New Abbey village, and contains a Free church and a public school. The parish of New Abbey comprises an area of 18,199 acres, and in 1881 the population was 906.

LOCHRUTTON is a parish lying 5 miles S.W. of Dumfries, its greatest length being five and a half miles by four and a half broad. It has an extremely hilly surface, at whose base lies the only village it contains, and the lake Lochfoot, from which the village derives its name. This fine sheet of water—one mile long by half a mile broad—supplies the inhabitants of Dumfries and neighbourhood with an unfailing supply of water. On one of the hills there still exist remains of a distinct Druidical circle. Acreage, 7,411. Population in 1881, 614.

KIRKBEAN is a small parish and village, the latter, very inconsiderable, is situated 5 miles S. of New Abbey and about 10 S.E. of Dumfries, in the northern part of the parish, about a mile from the sea. This little place possesses some notoriety, if not distinction, from having been the birthplace of John Paul, otherwise Paul Jones, a "sea adventurer," who was born in 1745, and was the son of a gardener in the place. The road between Kirkbean and Southwick, a distance of four miles, is considered one of the prettiest in the stewartry. On a clear day the Isle of Man and the Cumberland coast may be plainly seen. The conspicuous mountain called Criffel stands partly within the parish and partly within that of New Abbey, and there are within the former traceable ruins of the castles of Caven and Weath, both of which were the property and occasional residence of the Regent Morton. There are other small villages in the parish—MAINSRIDDLE, containing a Free and a United Presbyterian church; and SOUTHERNESS, a bathing village, the latter being situated at the extreme point of the coast, which runs to Solway Firth. On the point is a lighthouse. CARSETHORN and PRESTON MILL are small hamlets also in this parish, both about a mile distant from the village of Kirkbean; the former is a favourite resort for bathers in the season. Acreage, 7,937. Population of Kirkbean parish in 1881, 794.

KIRKGUNZEON is a parish lying 8 miles W. from New Abbey, and is a station on the Castle Douglas and Dumfries Railway. Acreage, 11,956. Population in 1881, 656.

NEW GALLOWAY,

BALMACLELLAN, DALRY, AND CARSPHAIRN.

NEW GALLOWAY is a small town and royal burgh, in the parish of Kells, and union of Kirkcudbright, 84 miles S.S.W. from Edinburgh, 24 W. from Dumfries, 18 N.E. from Newton-Stewart, 14 N.W. from Castle Douglas, 8 N.W. from Parton, and 20 N.W. from Kirkcudbright, pleasantly situated on the west bank of the river Ken, over which was thrown in 1821 an elegant stone bridge of five arches; this structure lying in the valley below the town, has a very pleasing effect. At its completion a dinner was given by the late Lord Viscount Kenmure, to 14 of the oldest inhabitants of the town, whose united ages amounted to 1,264 years. The houses of the town stretch along the public road, and form a tolerably well-built street. The business of the place is confined to the local domestic and handicraft branches. Galloway's burghal charter was conferred by Charles I., and the municipal government is vested in a provost, two bailies, and nine councillors. The sheriff's court is held three times a year. The Town Hall is situated in the centre of the town, and has a public clock. On the north side of the town, within the distance of half a mile, is the parish church, a neat stone edifice, with a square tower in the centre, built in 1822; in the same year a Sunday school was established, in which upwards of 100 children are taught. The churchyard contains an ancient tombstone having the armorial ensigns of the Coultharts and Macturks curiously sculptured upon it, and a Covenanter's monument. At a short distance south of the town stands the ancient castle of Kenmure, once a place of considerable strength; Mary Queen of Scots lodged in it one night, on her way from this country to England. Loch Ken, which adjoins the town, is four miles and a half long, and in many places more than a mile broad; it abounds with pike and perch. There is a commodious hotel in the town, the Kenmure Arms. The nearest railway station is five miles distant. The parish of Kells embraces an area of 48,581 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 970; of this number 422 were returned for New Galloway.

DALRY (or ST. JOHN'S), is a village in the parish of its name, lying on the east bank of the river Ken, three and a half miles N. of New Galloway, the same distance from Balmaclellan, and 24 miles N. of Kirkcudbright. The southern portion of the district is in a beautiful valley, composed of rich arable land; the high grounds are pastoral, and graze considerable numbers of cattle and sheep. The village of DALRY (the name of which signifies "the dale of the king") is surrounded with delightful scenery; and there is a good hotel (the Lochinvar) at the command of the visitor. In 1858 the Public

Hall (or St. John's Hall) was erected, and is used for the purpose of holding public meetings, lectures, &c. It was built by subscription, at a cost of nearly £400. In the churchyard is a stone erected to the memory of two Covenanters, with the following inscription :—

Behold ! Behold ! a stone's here forced to cry
Come see two martyrs under me that ly !
At Water of Dee who slain were by the hand
Of cruel Claverhouse and's bloodie band.
No sooner had he done this horrid thing
But's fore'd to cry, Stewart's soul in Heaven doth sing.
Yet, strange ! this rage pursued even such when dead,
And in the tombs of their ancestors laid,
Causing their corps be mov'd out of the same,
Discharging in churchyard to bury them.
And this they did 'cause they would not perjure
Our covenants and Reformation pure.
Because, like faithful martyrs, for to dy
They rather chus'd than treacherouslie comply
With cursed prelacy, the nation's bane,
And with indulgence our churches stain.
Perjur'd intelligencers were so rife,
Shew'd their curs'd loyalty to take their life.

There are several lakes in the parish ; the largest, Lochinvar, covers an area of 50 acres; in the lake stand the remains of an ancient castle, formerly belonging to the Gordons, Knights of Lochinvar, and latterly Viscounts of Kenmure. The area of the parish is 34,535 acres, and its population in 1881 was 988.

CARSPHAIRN, a parish and village, 13 miles N. of New Galloway, and 32 miles N. of Kirkcudbright, is situated near the river Deogh ; the village contains a parish kirk, the manse, a parochial school, and a few scattered houses. The parish is somewhat extensive, but thinly populated; it is the most northerly and mountainous district in the stewartry, and is chiefly devoted to grazing. This parish, with those of Dalry, Kells, and Balmaclellan, are designated the district of Glekens—famed for the true breed of black-faced sheep and black cattle, as also for good horses of the Galloway breed. Acreage, 54,624 ; population in 1881, 484.

The small village of BALMACLELLAN, about 2 miles E. of New Galloway, in the parish of its name, stands on the opposite side of the Ken to New Galloway, not far from the confluence of that stream with the head of Loch Ken, 12 miles S.W. of Moniaive. The parish is of a moory character, interspersed with some inconsiderable lakes. Acreage, 23,019 ; population in 1881, 937.

LANARKSHIRE,

OR as it is sometimes designated CLYDESDALE, is a large, populous, and highly important manufacturing district, in the western part of the Lowlands or southern division of Scotland, bounded by Dumfries-shire on the south, the counties of Ayr and Renfrew on the west, those of Dumbarton and Stirling on the north, Linlithgowshire and Edinburghshire on the south-east, and Peebles on the east. Its extreme length (from south-south-east to north-north-west is somewhat more than fifty miles, and its greatest breadth in the middle (from east to west) is about thirty-four miles; it includes within its area 889 square miles, or 568,868 acres, of which 4,584 are under water. In size Lanark is the eleventh of the Scottish counties, and in population the first. At an early period this extensive district was, for convenience, divided into two wards, called the Over Ward and Nether Ward, Lanark being the chief town and seat of justice of the former, and Rutherglen of the latter; this arrangement was altered during the last century, when the county was divided into three wards, namely, the Upper, the Nether or Lower, and the Middle Wards, the chief towns being Glasgow, Lanark, and Hamilton, each district being subject to the jurisdiction of a sheriff-substitute. The central part of the county throughout is termed Clydesdale, or the Vale of Clyde, from being the basin of that beautiful and useful river, of which we shall say more hereafter. Throughout the arduous struggle for Scottish independence, Lanark was the theatre of many miseries and military excesses. Under the reign of James I. a portion of the county was taken from it, and formed into the district of Renfrew. At a subsequent date the turbulence of the Douglases, with the intrigues of the first Lord Hamilton, involved Lanarkshire in the various calamities consequent upon intestine warfare; it subsequently became subject to a thirty years' civil commotion, stimulated by the prosecution of the more zealous Presbyterians of this district by Charles I.; the revolution of 1688, however, was the harbinger of a more tranquil future, and it has ever since advanced in wealth and every species of improvement.

SOIL, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, CLIMATE, &C.—The upper division of the county is very mountainous; from Tinto, looking northwards, the face of the country is softened down to gentle elevations and gradual depressions. The Upper Ward, which may be deemed three-fifths of the county, is mostly hilly and moorish; and from the nature of the soil and the altitude of the surface cannot be considered susceptible of much agricultural improvement. At the commencement of the Middle Ward the elevation of the land is obviously diminished, while the declivity continues descending towards the north-west; the surface is everywhere diversified by frequent inequalities, so as to leave no level space except the valleys along the river; indeed, the Middle Ward, though esteemed a good agricultural district, is nearly one-third moss land. The Lower Ward is of very limited extent, and derives its justly-acquired importance from being the seat of a most abundant population. The commencement of improvement in soil and cultivation in this part of Scotland was not apparent until about the middle or nearer the end of the eighteenth century; from this period draining, planting, and enclosing took place in various districts; wheat, barley, and oats (the two latter more abundantly) are produced from different soils in the county; potatoes are planted in considerable quantities; turnips are sown pretty generally, and artificial grasses are profusely raised in every direction. Some flax is likewise grown, which is spun by females, who dispose of the yarn in the markets of Lanark, Biggar, Carnwath, and other places. Gardens and orchards occupy many acres of land, particularly on the banks of the Clyde; in this part they are of the most luxuriant growth, the orchards consisting chiefly of apple, pear and plum trees. In the neighbourhood of Carluke strawberries are also grown in abundance. The inhabitants of the inland and upland districts rear and graze great numbers of black cattle and sheep, and the Clydesdale breed of horses is well known. The climate, although varying considerably in different situations in the low-lying districts, in the vicinity of the Clyde is mild and temperate; but in the uplands in the south, south-west, and south-east the weather is more severe. In mineral productions, Lanarkshire is, perhaps, the richest in Scotland. Gold, to an important amount, was, at an early period, found in this county, and in later days, on the sides of a rivulet called the Wenlock, small pieces of that precious metal, in a pure state, have frequently been picked up from among the sand and soil brought down by the torrents from the precipices and slopes of the mountains; particles of gold have also been found in Crawford Muir, with some large pieces of lapis lazuli. At present plentiful supplies of lead may be had in the parish of Crawford; and coal, ironstone, limestone, freestone, sandstone, whinstone, fire-clay and a variety of other metallic, mineral and fossil substances are to be obtained abundantly in different districts of the county. The lead mines belonging to the Earl of Hopetoun, at Leadhills, afford employment and maintenance to a large number of workmen. Owing to the discovery of large quantities of bituminous shale, the manufacture of paraffin oil has been extending very rapidly in the neighbourhoods of Airdrie, Lanark, and other places, and bids fair to become one of the most important trades in the district. GLASGOW being the paramount seat of the manufactures for which Lanarkshire is so eminently distinguished, it is unnecessary in this article to treat of the subject at any length, as under the head of that most important city notice will be taken of whatever is connected with its commerce and products. It need only be stated in this place that the cotton goods for which Glasgow is the vast depository are to a very considerable extent woven in different villages and parishes in the county, and that this branch of manufacture alone yields support to a very large proportion of the dense population. Mention may here, however, be made of the very extensive works in several places in the shire for the manufacture of pig and malleable iron and steel, tubes and boilers, besides which, there are large engineering, brick, tile and terra cotta, paper, and many and various other kinds of works.

RIVERS, MOUNTAINS, AND RAILWAYS.—The principal river is the noble and pre-eminently useful Clyde, which is formed by the concentration of a number of straggling burns and rivulets rising amid the mountains and issuing from the waters which separate Lanarkshire from the counties of Peebles and Dumfries. The chief of these tributaries are the Powtrail water, the Crook burn, and the Evan and Elvan waters; these coalescing compose a stream that, after flowing about two miles, receives an accession—first from Glengonar water, and next from Daneaton water, which constitute properly the river Clyde, at a distance of upwards of twelve miles from the highest springs of its fountains. The Clyde flows in a longitudinal direction, in a winding course of more than sixty miles, dividing the county into two nearly equal parts, and ultimately falls into the Firth of Clyde, opposite the Isle of Bute. It ranks amongst the largest rivers of Scotland, and is navigable for vessels of one thousand tons burthen as far as the city of Glasgow. Its waters and conduces to the fertility of delightful valleys, and in its progress forms several falls and cascades of a picturesque and romantic character, particularly "the falls of Clyde," which, with the beautiful scenery around, possess an almost irresistibly attractive influence on the minds and over the feelings of visitors for pleasure and admirers of natural loveliness. On either side the grand river receives a variety of tributaries, all of them respectively of important advantage in their application to the machinery of manufacturing and agricultural mills. The most prominent of these secondary rivers within the shire are the Douglas water, the Mouse, the Nethan, the Avon, the Calder, the North Calder, and the Kelvin. There are other streams, of still less magnitude and consequence, as the Elwin, the Little Clyde, the Cotten, the Logan, and the Avon. The greatest elevations of this county, with their altitude above the level of the sea, are:—The Lowther Hills, 2,450 feet; Tinto, 2,236; Culter Fell, 1,700; Welstoun Mount, 1,550; Leven Seat, 1,250; and Dickmount Hill, 700. The numerous lines of rail which permeate this county have given such facilities for the transmission of its products and its wants as to cause considerable changes in its character, and also in the relative position of a large portion of its population.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &C.—Lanarkshire comprises (including the city parishes of Glasgow) forty-nine parishes and two parts of parishes, which form four presbyteries in the Synod of Glasgow & Ayr; it contains five royal and parliamentary burghs—Glasgow, Airdrie, Lanark, Rutherglen, and Hamilton. Previous to the Redistribution of Seats Bill, 1885, the county returned two representatives to the Imperial Parliament, but on the passing of that measure was apportioned into six divisions, and was given four additional members. Glasgow, which up to that time had sent but two members, was also separated into seven divisions, with the privilege of electing one representative for each. The royal burgh of Lanark, in conjunction with Hamilton and Airdrie in this county, Linlithgow, in the county of that name, and Falkirk in Stirlingshire, also contribute another member. The gentlemen at present sitting for the county are:—Govan Division (number of voters, 9,240), John Wilson, Esq.; Partick Division (9,342), Alexander Craig-Sellar, Esq.; North-Western Division (9,911), R. B. C. Cunninghame-Graham, Esq.; North-Eastern Division (10,934), Donald Crawford, Esq.; Mid Division (9,526), J. W. Philipps, Esq.; South Division (8,673), James H. C. Hozier, Esq. The Lord-lieutenant is Sir Thomas Edward Colebrooke, Bart. This county, according to the census returns of 1871, contained a population of 377,874 males and 387,465 females; total, 765,339. In 1881 the figures were: males, 449,297; females, 455,115; total, 904,412; showing an increase over 1871 of 139,073. The valuation of the county for 1888-89 (exclusive of railways and canals) is: Upper Ward, £310,632; Middle Ward, £901,471; Lower Ward, £903,465; total, £2,115,568.

AIRDRIE,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CALDERBANK, CLARKSTON, DRUMGELLOCH, GLENMAVIS, GREENGAIRS, MOFFAT, RAWYARDS, STAND, PLAINS, CALDERCRUIX, WHITERIGG, NEW MONKLAND, AND CHAPELHALL.

AIRDRIE is a thriving market and post town, and a burgh of barony separated from the parish of New Monkland, and erected into a quoad sacra parish, 18 miles N.N.E. from Lanark, 32 W. from Edinburgh, and 11 E. from Glasgow; eligibly situated on the great or middle road between the two cities, and occupying a rising ground with its principal slope to the west. The advance of Airdrie has been rapid, and it is now a town of considerable importance, its commercial prosperity being attributable to the opening up of rich fields of coal and ironstone in the district. There are also several engineering works and brass and iron foundries in the town, besides an extensive cotton mill. The country is intersected in every direction by railroads for the transmission of coal, &c. to the various ironworks, and to Glasgow, with which city, and every part of the kingdom, communication is now largely maintained. The Monkland Canal also approaches within a mile and a half of the town. Hand loom weaving, which at one time occupied large numbers in the town, is now almost extinguished by the introduction of steam power. Paper making and calico printing are carried on at Moffat and Caldercruix, and there are oil works at Whiterigg, railway waggon works at Rawyards, and a number of stone quarries and brick yards in the district. Branches of the Bank of Scotland, the Royal, the National, the Clydesdale, and the British Linen Company Banks are settled here, as well as a bank for savings. There are several hotels and posting establishments, and the shops for general supply are well stored with every necessary article for the demand of a busy population. The Advertiser, a highly respectable newspaper, is printed and published here weekly, by the enterprising firms of Messrs. Baird & Hamilton; it is ably edited, and enjoys a very extensive circulation.

The burgh consists of several principal streets, with others of a smaller class diverging from them; it is built on a regular plan, has many excellent houses, is lighted with gas, and well supplied with good water. It possesses a town hall, ornamented with a spire and clock. There is also a handsome pile called the County Buildings, in which the sheriff court is held every Tuesday and Friday; a justice of peace court every Monday and Thursday, and in which are also the offices of the sheriff clerk, the clerk of the peace, the procurator fiscal, and other public functionaries. The burgh is governed by a regular bench of magistrates, composed of a provost, three bailies, and twelve councillors, with a treasurer and town clerk; it unites with Falkirk, Hamilton, Lanark, and Linlithgow in returning one member to Parliament under the name of the Falkirk Burghs, the present representative being W. P. Sinclair, Esq.

The places of worship comprise those for the Established church, the Free church, United Presbyterian church, Congregational, Wesleyan, Reformed Presbyterian, Evangelical Union, Baptist, and Roman Catholic bodies. The town has several good schools, among which is the Airdrie Academy, opened in 1848, and erected at the sole expense of the proprietor, Mr. Alexander, of Airdrie House, at an outlay of upwards of £2,500; it is situated a short distance to the west of the town. In the surrounding neighbourhood are many neat modern villas and handsome residences. Fairs are held on the last Tuesday in May and the third Tuesday in November. The population of the burgh in 1871 was 13,488, and in 1881 13,363.

CLARKSTON is a village in the parish of New Monkland, two miles E. from Airdrie, on the principal road between Edinburgh and Glasgow, containing a church of the Establishment and a Board school.

CALDERBANK is a considerable village, also in the parish of New Monkland, about two miles S. from Airdrie. Population in 1881, 1,749, but it has lately been much reduced.

CHAPELHALL is a village in the parish of Bothwell, but in the postal district of Airdrie; it lies about one mile E. from Calderbank, There are two places of worship, one for Free Presbyterians and one for Roman Catholics; also two schools. Population in 1881, 1,829.

GLENMAVIS is a village in New Monkland parish, one mile and a half from Airdrie. The parish church and schools are situated here.

GREENGAIRS is a village in New Monkland parish, 4½ miles N.E. from and in the postal district of Airdrie. There are a Free church, an Established church and a Board school here. The village is situated in an extensive coal district. Population in 1881, 798.

PLAINS is a small village one mile and a half E. from Clarkston, in the parish of New Monkland, and is a station on the Monkland branch of the North British Railway. There are two forges in the neighbourhood for the manufacture of shovels, &c., and a short distance further east, at CALDERCRUIX, are extensive calico printing and paper works. Population in 1881, 516.

RAWYARDS, WHITERIGG, STAND, DRUMGELLOCH, and MOFFAT are small villages in the parish of New Monkland, and postal district of Airdrie. At the last named place there are works for paper making and calico printing, which afford employment for a number of hands.

BIGGAR,

AND THE PARISHES OF CULTER, COVINGTON AND THANKERTON (UNITED), KILBUCHO, BROUGHTON AND GLENHOLM (UNITED), SKIRLING, SYMINGTON, WANDELL AND LAMINGTON (UNITED), WISTON AND ROBERTON (UNITED), AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BIGGAR is a small neat town in the parish of its name, in the Upper Ward of Lanark, 28 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 32 S.E. from Glasgow, 16 W. from Peebles, and 12½ S.E. from Lanark, situate on the road between the two last-named towns. The town, which consists principally of a spacious and tolerably neat built main street, was created a baronial burgh by charter of James II. to Lord Robert Fleming of Biggar, in the fifteenth century. It greatly owes its prosperity to a large and populous neighbourhood. The buildings are handsome, and the shops are well laid out, the whole being lighted with gas by a company formed in 1839. The Caledonian Railway Company in 1858-9 constructed a single branch line of rails from their main line at Symington, passing through Biggar and terminating at Peebles, a distance of about 20 miles. This line is very advantageous, and adds greatly to the benefit of the inhabitants of Biggar and surrounding neighbourhoods. There are a few good inns, an auction mart, and three banking establishments—branches respectively of the Commercial, the National and the Royal Bank of Scotland. The town is well supplied with pure water, conveyed from a source five miles distant, the former supply, after an analysis, having been found to be of an impure description. In 1545 Lord Fleming founded and endowed a collegiate church for a provost, eight prebends, four singing boys, and six poor men. It was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and built in the form of a cross in a plain Gothic style; this ancient place of worship is now the parish church. There are also two United Presbyterian churches, one of which has been re-built in a handsome style. At a short distance from the town are still to be seen some remains of Boghall Castle, the once feudal stronghold of the Fleming family, and the principal residence of successive lords of that name until late in the seventeenth century, according to several accounts, some of which are traditional. Its next possessors were the Elphinstones, through whose neglect it fell into decay. At a comparatively recent date, however, it has been subjected to greater destruction than time would have wrought, for its walls have been pulled down, and the materials carried off to form the drains and dykes in the neighbourhood; the antiquarian would now find it difficult to trace out its former extent, for latterly the plough of the husbandman has passed through its once spacious courts. Tradition reports a bloody engagement to have taken place near this town between the Scots, under Wallace, and the English army, when that distinguished leader drove the latter into a morass, where most of them perished. The parish is six miles in length by three and a half in breadth, embracing 7 272 statute acres, having the river Clyde on its western boundary, Peebles-shire on the east, and the parish of Covington on the west. The weekly market is held on Monday; and the fair on the last Thursday in January and October, third Thursday in July (old style), and last Thursday in April. In 1881 the parish had a population of 2,128, the town possessing 1,556 of this number.

CULTER is the next adjoining parish to Biggar, on the south west, having the river Clyde passing through it. It is also a station on the Peebles-shire branch of the Caledonian Railway. Agriculture and sheep farming appear to be carried on extensively. Several handsome residences and tastefully-wooded grounds contribute to the beauty of the scenery, which is here bold and attractive. A small portion of the parish is in Peebles-shire, and the whole of it contains an area of 11,883 statute acres. Population in 1881, 574.

COVINGTON and THANKERTON are united parishes on the north-west bank of the river Clyde, the parish church being situated about six miles N. from Biggar. Extensive tracts are here devoted to pasture, and the remaining portions to tillage. At the small village of Thankerton there is a station on the Caledonian line of railway. There is a public library here, which contains upwards of 2,000 volumes; it was established in the year 1799. The principal landowners are Sir Simon M. Lockhart, Bart. of Lee, and Sir Windham C. J. C. Anstruther, Bart. of Carmichael. The united parishes contain an area of 5 114 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population numbering 444.

KILBUCHO, BROUGHTON and GLENHOLM are also united parishes partly adjoining and stretching along east and south of Biggar; but although in the county of Peebles, they are within the postal district assigned to Biggar. A succession of lofty eminences here meet the eye in every direction, and most of the hills being clothed with verdure to their summits, vast numbers of sheep graze over them. At the neat hamlet of Broughton there is a station on the Peebles branch of the Caledonian railway, 4½ miles S.E. from Biggar. There are an Established church, a Free church, and two Board schools; a post and money order office has been opened at Broughton, that at Rachan Mill being continued as a receiving office. The principal landowners are the Rev. William Welsh, of Mossfennen; James Tweedie, Esq. of Quarter; and Sir James M. Naismith, Bart. of Powso. The area of the united parishes embraces 18,065 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population numbering 665.

SKIRLING is a parish and small village of the same name; the latter, in which stands the parish church, is about 2 miles E. from Biggar, and, although belonging to the Peebles-shire, it is within the postal district and presbytery of Biggar. The general features of the district are of the same hilly and undulating character noticeable throughout the surrounding country, but in a more advanced state of cultivation. The parish is about 3 miles long by 2½ in width, and contains an area of 3,423 statute acres. The whole of the land in the parish belongs to Sir William H. G. Carmichael, Bart. Population in 1881, 274.

SYMINGTON is another of those rural parishes, about 3 miles S.W. from Biggar. It is watered by the river Clyde, and is a junction on the Caledonian railway, at which the Peebles line branches off. The most striking feature throughout this district is the mountain of Tinto. There is an Established church and a Board school. Acreage, 3,504; population in 1881 462.

WANDELL and LAMINGTON are united parishes close to the Caledonian line of railway, the village of Lamington being 6 miles S.W. from Biggar. In addition to the parish church, there is an Episcopal church, built by the Right Hon. Lord Lamington, whose seat, Lamington House, is in close proximity. A post and money order office is situated in the village; there are also a Board school and one for females supported by the Countess of Lamington. The mountain of Tinto, 2,336 feet, and Coulter Fell, 2,330 feet above sea level, are the loftiest eminences in this very romantic neighbourhood. Acreage, 12,820; population in 1881, 316.

WISTON and ROBERTON are united parishes, the former about 3 miles S.E. from Lamington railway station, and the latter 7 miles S.E. from Biggar. Acreage, 13,140; population in 1881, 562.

BLANTYRE.

UNDER the name BLANTYRE there is comprised three villages—viz., HIGH BLANTYRE, LOW BLANTYRE and STONEFIELD. The first of these is a small ancient village, 8 miles S. by E. from Glasgow, and between 2 and 3 W. by N. from Hamilton, situated on the road between the last-named town and East Kilbride. The second village, LOW BLANTYRE, rather more than a mile distant in a north-easterly direction, was built and is owned by Messrs. Henry Monteith & Co., dyers, whose large establishment (one hundred years old) is close at hand, and has an extensive frontage to the river Clyde. The works are, however, now (1888) at a standstill. Adjoining are the premises of Messrs. Robert Kerr & Co., cotton manufacturers. It may be interesting to know that at one time this village contained quite an independent and separate community, having gates, which still exist, and which used to be shut at night. It had also a church, graveyard and school of its own. Of late years, however, this isolation has been entirely discontinued. It was in a small house of a row in this village that Dr. Livingstone, the celebrated African explorer and philanthropist, was born, both he and his father having been employed in the mills. STONEFIELD, the third village, lying about midway between the other two, is entirely the creation of the coal trade, and principally inhabited by the miners employed in the numerous pits in the neighbourhood belonging to the large coal-masters—Messrs. Merry & Cuninghame, Messrs. Baird and Messrs. Dixon, Limited. It was in one of the Blantyre pits that the great explosion of 22nd October, 1877, took place, causing the death of over two hundred men and boys. The destitution and suffering consequent on an event of this kind were vastly diminished by the creation of a large relief fund, which the country in sympathising benevolence subscribed, and which still exists to aliment the widows and orphans. These villages are situated in a rich fertile district, in the middle ward of the shire. The parish of Blantyre has a front to the Clyde of about two miles and a half, and extends six miles in length; it embraces an area of 3,954 acres. To the south of High Blantyre, near the farm of Park, and in a very picturesque locality, is a spring strongly impregnated with sulphur; the water is of a similar quality to that of St. Bernard's well, near Edinburgh. It was formerly much resorted to, and is still efficacious in the cure of scrofulous and scorbutic cases. On the south bank of the Clyde, directly opposite to Bothwell Castle, on a rocky eminence, stand the ruins of the once splendid priory of Blantyre, founded early in the thirteenth century. At the Reformation, the priory was demolished, and its revenues, with the patronage of the parish church, given by James VI. to Walter Stewart, afterwards lord treasurer of Scotland, and created a baron in 1606, with the title of Lord Blantyre. The family is distinguished in both Scottish and British history. Population of Blantyre parish in 1881, 9,760.

BOTHWELL AND UDDINGSTON,

WITH THE HAMLET OF FALLSIDE.

BOTHWELL is an ancient village, in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Glasgow to Hamilton, between eight and nine miles S.E. from the former, and between two and three N.W. from the latter town. The Caledonian and North British railways each have a station here. The parish is about eight miles and a half long by four broad; the great roads from Edinburgh to Glasgow, and from Glasgow to Carlisle, pass through it; and besides the river Clyde, it is intersected by the two Calders, which are beautifully skirted with wood. Throughout the parish coal is found in abundance, and several collieries are in full operation. Near the village, towards the west, on the side of the Clyde, is the modern mansion of Baron Douglas of Douglas and Earl of Home, standing in the midst of shrubberies and plantations; contiguous to which, on an eminence, is the magnificent ruin of Bothwell Castle, once an important Scottish fortress, much admired by all visitors. About half a mile from the town is the Glasgow District Asylum, formerly conducted as a private asylum under Dr. Dean Fairless. The institution was bought by the Glasgow District Board of Lunacy in 1878, and after undergoing extensive alterations, was opened in 1881 as a district asylum for pauper patients; it contains over two hundred beds. The road to Hamilton is carried over the Clyde by means of Bothwell Bridge, a name famous in Scottish history from this being the spot on which the Duke of Monmouth routed a formidable army of Covenanters, on the 22nd of June, 1679. The ancient church of Bothwell was founded by Archibald "The Grim," Earl of Douglas, in 1398, with liberal endowment for a provost and eight prebendaries. An elegant church was erected by the heritors of this parish; it is in the Gothic style, and exhibits a fine appearance as seen on approaching the village from Hamilton. There is a branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, here, and a Board school and a private academy. The area of Bothwell parish is 13,644 acres, and its population in 1881 was 25,466, of which number Bothwell village contained 1,520.

UDDINGSTON is a thriving village in the parish of Bothwell, four miles N.W. from Hamilton. The road from Glasgow to Carlisle passes through the village; and there is a station on the Caledonian and also one on the North British Railway. There are iron foundaries and establishments for the manufacture of agricultural implements. The village is lighted with gas, and presents an appearance of neatness and good order. The places of worship are for Established, Free, United Presbyterian, Evangelical Union, Episcopal, and Roman Catholic denominations. There are also three public and one private school. Branches of the Bank of Scotland, and British Linen Company Bank are established here. Population in 1881, 3,542.

FALLSIDE is a hamlet in the parish of Bothwell, about one mile N.E. from and in the postal district of Bothwell village, with a station on the Caledonian Railway.

CAMBUSLANG,

WITH NEWTON AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CAMBUSLANG is a rising town, in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Glasgow to Hamilton, about 4 miles S.E. from the former place, and lying on the banks of the Clyde. In consequence of the introduction of gravitation water in 1872, and the convenience of railway accommodation to and from the city of Glasgow, a large number of well-to-do Glasgow business people have come to settle in the place. The works of Messrs. T. P. Miller & Co., turkey red dyers, afford employment to the female working portion of the population. The large and extensive works of the Steel Company of Scotland, Limited, together with a number of coal pits that have been opened up, have contributed very materially to the growth and population of the town. The "Auld Kirk," as it is termed, prior to the Reformation belonged to a prebend of Glasgow Cathedral; there was also at that time a chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary; in 1565, the chaplain, Sir John Millar, made grants of the property endowed for its support; these lands are still called "chapel lands." Besides this edifice there are now two other Established churches, two for United Presbyterians, a Free and a Congregational church, and a Baptist and a Roman Catholic chapel. There is a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, established here. There are also handsome schools under the School Board. In the south-east portion of the parish lies the famous "Dechmont Hill," of which Sir Walter Scott records that "Wight Wallace (meaning Sir William Wallace) stood on Dechmont Hill, and blew his bugle round, till the wild bull in Cadzow wood had started at the sound." Cadzow wood, or forest, is in Hamilton parish, a distance of four miles away, where a famous breed of wild, white cattle were kept by the noble house of Hamilton, and where some of the same breed are to be seen to this day, as it is said a condition of the title of the dukedom of Hamilton to the estate is that a specimen of the breed should be retained in that forest. The annual agricultural show of the Cambuslang, Blantyre, and Ruthergien Agricultural Society is held at Cambuslang, on the Queen's birthday, and is a great gala day in the town. The parish, which embraces an area of 5,160 acres, had in 1881 a population of 9,447, of which the town contained 5,538.

NEWTON is a small hamlet in the parish of Cambuslang, 2 miles distant from the village of that name. It has a station on the Caledonian line, close to which are the extensive works of the Steel Company of Scotland and the Clyde Nail Co. Limited.

CARLUKE AND BRAIDWOOD,

WITH THE HAMLETS OF KILNCADZOW AND LAW.

CARLUKE is a small town (formerly a burgh of barony), in the parish of its name, 32 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 20 S.E. from Glasgow, 10 S.E. from Hamilton, and 5 N.W. from Lanark. The parish, which lies on the north-east bank of the Clyde, is said to derive its name from St. Luke, to whom its old parish church was dedicated. The adjunct Car signifying a stronghold or castle; the former was ruinous before the Reformation, and of the latter no traces remain to mark its site. The town contains several regular streets, Kirkton street, High street, and Hamilton street, each having a number of fine stone buildings, and the shops are lighted with gas. The Rankin Memorial Hall, situated in High street, is a handsome building, erected within recent years, partly by subscription, the remainder £1,000 and a free site, having been given by James Brownlie, Esq., Glasgow. Besides the parish church there is a Free church, one each for United Presbyterians, Original Seceders, Evangelical Unionists, and Roman Catholics, and also a number of schools. Few districts are richer in minerals—coals, ironstone and limestone—than that of Carluke. In 1836-37 extensive works were erected by the Shotts Iron Company; they are situated about a mile north of the town, and consist of three blast furnaces, with steam engines in connection of the aggregate power of 140 horses. The coal, ironstone, and limestone are respectively of the best quality. The trade of the town and neighbourhood is chiefly confined to mining. Two branch banking establishments are settled here—the British Linen Co. Bank and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited; also a well-conducted Savings bank, which has greatly encouraged industry and provident habits among the inhabitants at large. There are also two steam corn mills, several brickworks, a preserve manufactory, two engineering works, an iron foundry, and three firms who carry on an extensive business as timber merchants. The banks of the Clyde have long been famous for the culture of fruit trees. Apples, pears and gooseberries are produced in great abundance, and in higher perfection, in this district than in any other in Scotland, and quantities of the last-named fruit are annually disposed of at very remunerative prices, one property alone having realised in the season of 1872 the sum of £501. As a proof of the richness of the soil, may be mentioned the growth of strawberries, which of late years have been cultivated more extensively than in any other part of Scotland, and now form a prominent feature in the produce of the district. A large portion of the produce is usually purchased by the jelly and preserved fruit manufacturers, whilst great quantities are forwarded to the Glasgow markets. The margin of the river is adorned with many beautiful mansions, and tastefully arranged pleasure grounds, and the beauty of the woodland scenery in this part is justly admired. That profound mathematician, Major-General William Roy, was a native of this parish. Fairs are held on the second Thursday in March, 21st of May, and the 31st of October. There is also a great cattle show held here yearly, on the last Wednesday in July. The parish has an area of 15,345 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 8,552, the town of Carluke containing 3,867 of that number.

BRAIDWOOD is a small village in the parish of Carluke, 2 miles S.E. from that town, situate about half a mile to the right of the road leading to Lanark. A large chemical works, owned by Mr. James Martin, Carluke, is in operation; the same gentleman having also two large steam saw mills, at Braidwood and Carluke respectively. Two brick and tile works comprise the other industries of the place. A little to the north-west of the village is Braidwood House, a handsome stone mansion, and about half a mile nearer to the Clyde is a fine specimen of ancient architecture, apparently of the eleventh and twelfth centuries, consisting of a tower and keep in good preservation; but of the origin or uses of the structure tradition and history are alike silent. The building, which is partly inhabited, was a few years ago thoroughly repaired. It is called by the country people Ha'-Bar (Hall-Bar). Besides Braidwood there is the hamlet of KILNCADZOW, at which place there is a board school. LAW, a mining village, and quoad sacra parish, is 2½ miles N. of Carluke. The places of worship are Established and Free churches. There is also a Board school. Law has now a very fine railway station, being a junction, which here connects the Caledonian main line to England, and the south of Scotland with the new line to Perth, Stirling and the North.

CARNWATH AND CARSTAIRS,

WITH AUCHENGRAY, BRAEHEAD, DOLPHINTON, DUNSYRE, FORTH, HAYWOOD, LIBERTON, NEWBIGGING, PETTINAIN, WALSTON, WILSONTOWN AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CARNWATH is a village or small town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name, 25 miles S.S.W. from Edinburgh, 27 S.E. from Glasgow, 7 N.W. from Biggar, and the same distance E. from Lanark, situate on the main road between the latter town and Edinburgh. It consists of one street nearly three-quarters of a mile in length. About the centre is the tolbooth, a plain old building, in front of which is the cross, an obelisk, whereon the distances from Edinburgh to various places in Clydesdale and Ayrshire are distinctly marked. The houses, which are neat slate-roofed dwellings, have considerably augmented in numbers of late years. Sir Simon Macdonald Lockhart, Bart., of Lee and Carnwath, is superior of the burgh. The estate is held of the crown, on payment of a pair of red hose, which are run for annually on the day succeeding the August fair, and followed by athletic games, to the successful competitors for superiority in which are awarded medals and prizes in money. The church stands at the western end of the town, contiguous to a fragment of the ancient edifice, which prior to the Reformation belonged to the cathedral of Glasgow. The stone frame of the north window is still entire, and presents a fine specimen of masonry in the Gothic style. Another portion of the old building is now used as a sepulchre for the Lockhart family: it contains the remains of the former lords of the manor, the Somervilles, and a tomb on which a Lord Somerville is represented lying in complete armour along with the figure of his wife in the exact costume of the fifteenth century. The present church was erected in 1866, upon the site of the former one built about 1798. It is a handsome freestone building, of the Gothic style of architecture, and will accommodate 1,000 persons. About a mile to the north-west of Carnwath, are the scattered ruins of Cowthally Castle, in former ages the seat of the Somervilles. The Caledonian Railway Company have constructed a branch line, commencing from the main line at Carstairs Junction, passing through Dunsyre and terminating at Dolphinton, the whole distance being eleven miles and a quarter. There is also a branch line to Haywood and Wilsontown. The market, which is on Friday, is principally for meal. Fairs are held on the last Friday in February (new style), for hiring servants; the first Wednesday in April, for show of stallions, seeds and plants; the first Thursday in July (old style), for horses and cattle; the second Wednesday in August, for horses and cattle; and the Friday before the 31st of October, for hiring servants. The following villages in Carnwath parish may be briefly noticed, viz.—AUCHENGRAY, 5 miles N.E. of Carnwath, and a station on the Caledonian line. There are an Established Mission Church, a Board school, and post office here. BRAEHEAD, 3 miles N., where there are a United Presbyterian church and a Board school. FORTH, 5¼ miles N; there is a branch of the British Linen Co. Bank established here. HAYWOOD and WILSONTOWN, the latter 6 miles N. from Carnwath. At each place is a station on a branch of the Caledonian line. In the village of Haywood there is a Board school, and at Wilsontown there is a Free church and a subscription school. The parish, which embraces an area of 30,446 statute acres, had in 1881 a population of 5,831; of this number 845 were returned for the town.

CARSTAIRS is a small village in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Edinburgh to Lanark, 4 miles N.E. of the latter town, 3 W. of Carnwath, and about a mile E. from Carstairs Junction on the Caledonian railway. This was evidently a place of some consequence at the time of the Romans, from the number and magnitude of architectural and other remains of that people which have frequently been turned up when digging below the surface. The cottages of this rural village have a remarkably neat appearance, being tastefully adorned with shrubs and flowers at the expense of the proprietor of the place. At some short distance from the village, embosomed in thriving plantations, is Carstairs House, the family mansion of Joseph Monteith, Esq., of Carstairs, the principal landowner. The three fairs which were formerly held here, having gradually declined, are now altogether discontinued Acreage, 9,820. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,955.

DOLPHINTON and WALSTON are adjoining parishes of a pastoral character, the former 9 miles E. from Carnwath. The North British Railway Company have a station here. The places of worship are the parish and Episcopal churches, whilst at Walston there are the parish church and a Free church. There are Board schools in each village. Acreage: Dolphinton, 3,574; Walston, 4,361. Population in 1881: Dolphinton, 292; Walston, 340.

DUNSYRE (from dun-syrth, a steep hill) is a rural parish, bounded by Dolphinton and Walston on the south, and Carnwath on the west and north-west, and is a station on Dolphinton branch of the Caledonian line of railway. The district lies high, and is chiefly devoted to pasture and agriculture. The village, with the parish church, stands in the south-east part of the parish, on the high road. From the twelfth century to the Reformation the parish was a rectory of the monks of Kelso. Acreage, 10,743. Population in 1881, 254.

LIBERTON and PETTINAIN are parishes, each being about 3 miles S. of Carnwath. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agricultural pursuits. The places of worship are the parish churches, and there are Board schools. Acreage: Liberton, 8,231; Pettinain, 3,900. Population: Liberton, 1881, 625; Pettinain, 360.

COATBRIDGE,

WITH THE PARISHES OF OLD MONKLAND AND CADDER; ALSO THE VILLAGES OF BAILLIESTON, BARGEDDIE, BISHOP BRIGGS, GARNKIRK, GLENBOIG, CHRYSTON. DUNDYVAN, EASTERHOUSE, MOODIESBURN, GARTSHERRIE, MOUNT VERNON, SWINTON, WHIFFLET, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

COATBRIDGE is a populous town and burgh in the parish of Old Monkland, situated on the Glasgow and Edinburgh road, 8 miles E. from Glasgow, and 2 miles W. from Airdrie. Although but a few years ago this place was of trifling importance, yet by its local advantages, which consist in abundance of coal and ironstone, it has now become very populous, and its well-stored shops and busy streets give it the appearance of a thriving town. The North British and Caledonian Railways pass through the town, as does the Monkland canal, and they add very considerably to the wealth of the locality by affording ready transit to its productions. In the vicinity are five establishments for the manufacture of pig iron—viz., the Gartsherrie, the Calder, the Carnbroe, the Langloan, and those of Summerlee, all of which are on an extensive scale and afford employment to large numbers of the inhabitants. There are several establishments for the manufacture of malleable iron, and steel. The manufacture of iron tubes is carried on very extensively by the Caledonian Patent Lap-welded Tube Co.; Messrs. A. & J. Stewart, Limited, of the Clyde Tube Works; James Wilson & Sons; and others. There are also several extensive engineering and iron founding establishments. The Clydesdale, the National, the Royal, and the Union Banks have each a branch located here. There are places of worship for various denominations. In 1871 Coatbridge had a population of 15,802, and in 1881, 17,500. The population of the burgh is now (1888) estimated at 30,000.

OLD MONKLAND is a parish divided into three districts for registration purposes, and extends from the right bank of the Clyde to the border of New Monkland, a distance of between seven and eight miles, by a breadth near the Clyde of little more than one, but afterwards expanding to nearly four miles. It is bounded on the north by Calder and the barony parish of Glasgow, and on the south by Bothwell. This is one of the most productive parishes in Lanarkshire; it is well enclosed and cultivated, and until commerce, that destroyer of sylvan beauty, made such rapid strides, was one the most beautiful and finely-planted in the county. The whole of this parish is rich in minerals. DUNDYVAN is a village in this parish; here are the Navy Oakum Works of Messrs. John Smith & Co. The area of Old Monkland parish is 10,935 acres, and in 1881 its population was 37,323.

WHIFFLET, now included in the burgh of Coatbridge, is in the parish of Old Monkland, having a station on the Caledonian Railway, one mile distant from Coatbridge, and one on the North British line. There are engineering and agricultural implement works in the immediate neighbourhood. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a Roman Catholic chapel.

BAILLIESTON is a large village in the parish (parochial) of Old Monkland, from which it has been disjoined for ecclesiastical purposes, and erected into a quoad sacra parish, under the name of CROSSHILL; it is situated three miles and a half from Coatbridge, on the Edinburgh and Glasgow road, and contains places of worship for the Establishment, the United Presbyterian, the Episcopal church, Free church and Roman Catholics. In the vicinity are several collieries, which furnish employment to a number of the inhabitants.

CALDER, or CADDER, parish extends along the northern boundary of Lanarkshire, having Kirkintilloch and New Monkland on the east, New Kilpatrick on the west, Campsie on the north, and the barony parish of Glasgow on the south. Great improvements have been made in this district in agriculture. This progressive benefit has been accelerated by the great canal between the Forth and the Clyde, which passes through the parish for five miles, whilst the river Kelvin washes its northern boundary to the extent of six miles. The North British and Caledonian Railways pass through this parish. The discovery of coal on the estate of Calder, and coal and very valuable fire clay on that of Garnkirk, has materially enhanced the price of land. CHRYSTON, MUIRHEAD, BISHOP BRIGGS, and MOODIESBURN, are small villages in this parish, which comprises an area of 13,969 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 6,965.

GARNKIRK, in the parish of Calder, is situate on the Caledonian Railway, about six miles from Glasgow, and three and a half from Coatbridge; this place is important from the Garnkirk Fire Clay Works being situated here. This is perhaps one of the largest and most complete manufactories of fire-clay in Great Britain. There are about 500 men employed in mining and manufacturing the material. The quality of the fire-clay on this property is quite equal to that of Stourbridge, and the bricks, furnace blocks, retorts and crucibles find their way in large quantities to all parts of America, Germany, Holland, and Russia. The manufacture of glazed pipes for water and sanitary purposes and of ornamental articles, such as chimney cans, vases and fountains, is also extensively carried on at this establishment. There are likewise two other large establishments engaged in the manufacture of articles as above described—the Cardowan and Heathfield Fire Clay Company, and Mr. James Binnie, at Gartcosh. Population in 1881, 782.

GLENBOIG (or Garnqueen), is a village about three miles N. from Coatbridge, and a station on the Caledonian Railway. Here are the immense works of the Glenboig Union Fire Clay Co. Limited. In the formation of this company the works of the Glenboig, the Glenboig Star and the Cumbernauld were amalgamated, and they are probably the largest manufacturers of fire-bricks, blocks, &c., in the world. Fire bricks are also manufactured at Gartverrie, half a mile distant, and in this vicinity coal is also plentifully obtained. At ROBROYSTON, Sir William Wallace was betrayed into the power of Edward I. by Sir John Monteith, who, according to tradition, was bribed for that purpose by the English Court. Population in 1881, 934.

DOUGLAS AND RIGSIDE.

DOUGLAS, a village of great antiquity, is 41 miles S.W, from Edinburgh, 31 S.S.E. from Glasgow, 15 N. from Leadhills, 12 S. from Lanark, and 8 S. from Lesmahagow; situated nearly in the centre of the parish of its name, on the south side of the Douglas water, and on the road from Edinburgh to Ayr. The parish of Douglas takes its name from the stream that flows through it—the British words Dhu glas, signifying the "dark blue stream," and this is descriptive of the colour of the water. From such an etymology is derived the once dreaded and still noble name of Douglas (of this ancient family copious and interesting particulars will be found in Messrs. Chambers' "Gazeteer"). In the vicinity of the village, on the bank of the river, stands Douglas Castle, the residence of the Earl of Home, surrounded by extensive plantations. The old castle of Douglas was burned down in 1760; the following year the present edifice was begun to be erected in a magnificent style, from a plan by the late architect, Adam, but only a part of the original splendid design has yet been completed. The village consists of several narrow irregular streets, formed without any regard to order an uneven ground. Near the centre, in the village burial place, stands all that remains of the ancient parish church, in a vault belonging to the original structure are to be seen monuments of some of the great chiefs of the house of Douglas; several of these highly merit the investigation of the curious in sepulchral sculpture. Besides the parish church, there is a Free church and a United Presbyterian church. There are three Board schools in the parish, besides one for females, supported by the Countess of Home. The village is well lighted with gas. The inhabitants in general were at one time employed in hand-loom weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers, but this industry is almost extinct. The Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Royal Bank of Scotland have each a branch establishment here. The parish throughout is well stored with limestone, freestone and coal; of the latter mineral there are extensive seams, many of which are seven feet thick. The district is well watered; besides the Douglas there are three minor streams, which merge in that river previous to its falling into the Clyde, about seven miles below the village. Fairs are held on the first Wednesday in February, the third Friday in March, the first Friday after Whitsuntide, the third Friday in October, and the third Friday after Martinmas for hiring servants. The parish, which embraces an area of 34,137 statute acres, had in 1881 a population numbering 2,641, of which the village contained 1,262.

RIGSIDE is a small village in the parish of Douglas, 4 miles N. therefrom, situated on the road from Edinburgh to Ayr. In its neighbourhood are several collieries, which are worked by James Swann, Esq., of Collier Hall. It also abounds with rich and productive beds of ironstone, limestone and fire-clay. A new Free church was built in 1885, with a manse attached, at a total cost of about £1,300, in the Gothic style of architecture, from plans by Mr. J. B. Wilson, of Glasgow, the builders of the church being Messrs. Clarkson and Co. of Lesmahagow, and of the manse Mr. J. C. Burns, of Larkhall. The church is a compact and neat edifice, and will seat about 200. There is also a Board school in the village.

HAMILTON,

WITH THE PARISH OF DALSERF, AND THE VILLAGES OF AYR ROAD, LARKHALL, NETHERBURN, QUARTER, GREENFIELD AND BURNBANK.

HAMILTON is an ancient town, royal burgh, and the capital of the parish of its name and of the middle ward of the county; 37 miles W. by S. from Edinburgh, 10½ S.S.E. from Glasgow, 15 N.W. from Lanark, 8 S. from Airdrie, and 7 N. from Strathaven. It occupies an eligible site on the road from Glasgow to Carlisle, and Edinburgh and Ayr, and a pleasant situation in a highly cultivated county, washed by the Clyde and the Avon. The town lies along the base of a rising ground, extending nearly a mile in length, and consists of several streets of substantial, well-built houses, not very regularly disposed, but handsome in appearance, and the whole town has an air of comfort, respectability and activity. Of late years many improvements have been effected in the town and neighbourhood, and it is rapidly increasing in population and importance. A line of street has been opened through the town, forming part of the London road; a bridge called Cadzow bridge has been thrown across the ravine, thereby avoiding the lower part of the old town, and two lines of railway have been laid down from Glasgow, which have proved the means of opening the vast mineral field in the neighbourhood of Hamilton. Among the public buildings will be recognised the Town Hall, in the form of a Roman temple, with appropriate offices and a goal. The Victoria Hall, in Quarry street, almost opposite the Central Station, a fine building of red freestone, was erected in 1887, by the advocates of temperance, at a cost of £4,000; the main hall is capable of accommodating 1,500 persons. The town is well lighted with gas, and there are works for supplying the inhabitants with water. The moderate distance of Hamilton from Glasgow has facilitated the introduction of weaving cotton goods to a large amount; the lace trade is carried on to a considerable extent, and the prosperity of this business has been greatly augmented by improvements. There are six banking establishments prosperously settled in this burgh, viz., branches respectively of the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Bank of Scotland, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the British Linen Company, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited. In the fifteenth century Lord Hamilton erected the town into a burgh of barony. Queen Mary created it into a royal burgh in 1548, but after the Reformation the rights and privileges thus acquired from the Crown were resigned into the hands of William, Duke of Hamilton, who, in 1670, restored to the community its former franchises, and erected it into a burgh of regality dependent on him and his successors. The government of the burgh is invested in a provost, four bailies, and ten councillors; and in connection with Lanark, Airdrie, Falkirk and Linlithgow, it sends a representative to Parliament, the present member being W. P. Sinclair, Esq. The justices of peace hold regular courts for the trial of minor offences.

The places of worship are those of the Establishment, and Free, United Presbyterian, and Episcopal churches, and Independent and Roman Catholic chapels. The old parish church was made collegiate in 1451, by Sir James Hamilton, for a provost and prebendary, and has always been the place of sepulture of that family. The great object of attraction in this part of Lanarkshire is the palace of the Duke of Hamilton and its surrounding pleasure grounds. The pictures, ornaments, &c., belonging to his Grace were disposed of by auction in London in the month of June, 1882. In the middle of the great park, one mile from the town, on the rock overhanging the Avon, stand the ruins of Cadzow Castle, the ancient manor house. The park is well stocked with deer, and contains a number of stately oaks. Among the charitable institutions of Hamilton is a hospital, situate in Muir street, for four old people, endowed by the late Mr. Aikman, of Ross; there are likewise an orphan school, some friendly societies and a Masonic lodge. In the vicinity, to the west of the town, on the road to Bothwell, are spacious and handsome barracks, and on the banks of the Clyde is an extensive racecourse, on which horse races occasionally take place, and the meetings are noted as among the best attended in Scotland. QUARTER is a small village in Hamilton parish, two miles distant from that town. The weekly market for Hamilton is held on Friday. The hiring and cattle markets are held on the third Friday in April and the third Friday in October; and the annual cattle show about the beginning of June. The parish of Hamilton, which embraces 14,243 acres, in 1871 contained a population of 16,803, and in 1881, 26,231, the parliamentary burgh having 13,995 inhabitants.

DALSERF is a parish in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, on the west bank of the Clyde; its greatest length is 6½ miles, and its greatest breadth 4½. The soil is generally fertile and well cultivated. The only village deserving notice in the parish is LARKHALL, three miles and a half from Hamilton, on the great road from Glasgow to Carlisle. In this village many looms are employed in the weaving of fancy fabrics for Glasgow houses. The large bleach works of Messrs. D. C. Miller & Co are also situated here, and find occupation for a large number of hands; altogether the parish has every appearance of prosperity. There are several very extensive collieries in the parish, which give employment to the majority of the inhabitants. Dalserf parish embraces 6,956 acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 7,941, and in 1881 9,378; of the latter number Larkhall contained 6,503.

HOLYTOWN AND BELLSHILL,

WITH GREENHILL, MOSSEND, NEWHOUSE, SALSBURGH, TILLINGBURN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

HOLYTOWN is an extensive village and quoad sacra parish disjoined and formed into a separate ecclesiastical district, though still rated in the parish of Bothwell for parochial purposes; it is also in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, and 10 miles E. from Glasgow. The village derives its chief support from the extensive collieries in the neighbourhood, and from the works belonging to the Summerlee and Mossend Iron and steel Company, the Clydesdale Iron Company, and the Milnwood Iron and Steel Company, Limited, which give employment to a large number of persons. Here are an Established church and and a Board school. A station on the Caledonian Railway is within half a mile of the village. Population in 1881, 1,432.

BELLSHILL is a large and thriving village consisting chiefly of one main street over one mile and a half in length, situated in the parish of Bothwell, one mile W. from Holytown, on the through road to Glasgow, and deriving its chief support from the ironworks and numerous collieries in the vicinity. The Caledonian and the North British Railway Companies have each a station here, and there is a branch of the Bank of Scotland. There are several schools and there are places of worship belonging to the Established church, Free church, United Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, Evangelical Union and Primitive Methodists.

NEWHOUSE is a hamlet 2 miles E. from Holytown. Here are situated the works of the Legbrannock District Collieries Co. Limited.

GREENHILL is a small village about 4 miles E. from Holytown and one from Omoa station. There is a Board school in the village, and extensive collieries in the neighbourhood.

SALSBURGH, Sallysburgh, or Salzburgh, is a village in the parish of Shotts, 5 miles E. from and in the postal district of Holytown. The Coltness Iron Company have several collieries in the district. One mile east is the parish church of Shotts. The Original Secessionists have a place of worship near here. At Shotts Kirk two fairs are held annually, on the third Tuesday in June, and the last Tuesday in November, both old style. Population in 1881, 576.

TILLINGBURN is a hamlet near to the village of Greenhill, about 4 miles E. from Holytown and 2 from Omoa station, on the Cleland and Mid-Calder branch of the Caledonian Railway. The works of Mr. James Munro, artificial manure manufacturer, are situated in this hamlet.

KILBRIDE (EAST),

CARMUNNOCK AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KILBRIDE (EAST) is a village and burgh of barony in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Glasgow to Muirkirk, 8 miles S. from the former city by road, and 10¾ by rail, the like distance N. from Strathaven, between 6 and 7 S.W. from Hamilton, and 45 W. by S. from Edinburgh. There is a station here on the Glasgow and East Kilbride branch of the Caledonian railway. The parish, which comprehends the abrogated one of Torrance, contains some extensive limeworks, and coal also lies beneath the surface. The places of worship are the parish kirk, the United Presbyterian church, and the Free kirk. Kilbride has produced several eminent men, among whom are Dr. William Hunter and his brother Mr. John Hunter, the celebrated anatomist and physiologist. There are several Board schools and also one for young ladies. A market is entitled to be holden here on Monday. The cattle show, which is held on the second Friday in June for Clydesdale horses and Ayrshire cattle, is the only fair that takes place in East Kilbride. East Kilbride parish, which embraces 22,760 acres, in 1881 contained a a population of 3,975, of which the village possessed 1,118.

The parish of CARMUNNOCK lies on the north-western confines of the county, on the east bank of the White Cart river, having Kilbride on the south and Cambuslang on the east; it is four miles in length by three in breadth. The ground is partly arable and partly pastoral, the banks of the Cart presenting some fine woodland scenery. On the estate of Castlemilk (the proprietors of which are supposed to be lineal descendants of the royal house of Stuart), are the remains of a Roman military road; and many tumuli have been met with which when opened have always been found to contain human bones and instruments of war. In the house of Castlemilk which is noted for its fine situation, Mary Queen of Scots is said to have lodged the night before the battle of Langside. There is a place of worship for the members of the Established church, and a Board school. The parish supports its own poor by voluntary assessment. The nearest railway station is at Busby. Acreage, 3,479; population in 1881, 722.

LANARK,

WITH NEW LANARK, KIRKFIELDBANK, THE PARISH OF CARMICHAEL AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LANARK is a royal burgh and market town, the capital of the parish and county, to both of which it has given a name, and the seat of a presbytery; 32 S.W. from Edinburgh, 25 S.E. from Glasgow, 15 S.E. from Hamilton, and 11 N.W. from Biggar; situate on the main road from Stirling to Carlisle, and one mile above the left or east bank of the Clyde. There is a branch of the Caledonian railway communicating with the main line at Carstairs Junction. It is a place of great antiquity, and is the spot where the first assembly of parliament mentioned in the history of Scotland was convened by Kenneth III., in the year 978. It is said to have received its original charter from Alexander I., and it is certain it was a royal town as early at least as Malcolm. Many of the ancient Scottish kings made Lanark, or Lanerk, their residence; and at one period there stood a castle, on an apparently artificial mound, at the foot of the present Castlegate, the summit of which elevation is now converted into a bowling green. Lanark possesses interest as having been the scene of the first decisive military enterprise of the celebrated Sir William Wallace, that patriot having commenced his glorious, though personally unfortunate, career by the defeat and death of William de Heselrig, the English sheriff of Lanarkshire, in 1293. We are told that Wallace having married a lady of the name of Braidfoot, the heiress of Lamington, resided with her privately at Lanark, and that while there, he, with a few friends had a quarrel and conflict with some officers of the English garrison. The party of Wallace being overpowered by numbers, he made his escape to Cartland Crags, whereupon the sheriff seized his wife and put her to death. To avenge this barbarous atrocity, Wallace and his friends attacked the sheriff in the night, and massacred him, with two hundred and forty Englishmen. Bruce finally recovered Lanark from the English rule in 1310. The present town is principally composed of one line of streets, bearing the respective names of St. Leonard street, High street, Bloomgate, Westport, Wellgate, and Hope street; the latter, leading northwards, contains the County Buildings. Besides these there are several smaller streets, lanes and closes—viz., Broomgate, Castlegate, North and South vennels, Wide close, &c. The High street is a wide, spacious and noble looking street, with stone buildings of respectable appearance and well-furnished shops. Formerly the general occupation of the inhabitants was hand-loom weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers; this industry has, however, of late greatly decreased. The manufacture of wincys, shirtings, &c. is still carried on to some extent. There are also two breweries, one tannery, four branch banks, and several good inns. Close to the railway station is the fancy wood-work establishment of Messrs. Archibald Brown & Co., where a great variety of fancy articles are manufactured from wood and tastefully ornamented in tartan and various other patterns. This business was established here in 1866, and gives employment to a number of hands. At the head of Wellgate, and only a few minutes walk from the station is a very fine auction and cattle mart, owned by Messrs. Lawrie and Symington, at which are held the largest sales of live stock in the south of Scotland. Behind the Clydesdale Hotel are the Assembly Rooms, erected in 1827, on the site of which stood an ancient monastery of Franciscans. The County Buildings, erected in 1836, at a cost of £5,000, are situated in Hope street, and are a great ornament to that part of the town; they are in the Grecian style of architecture, with a noble front of freestone, and comprise commodious court rooms and appropriate offices. As a royal burgh, whose charters were finally confirmed by Charles I. in 1632, the town is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and nine councillors; it unites with Falkirk, Hamilton, Linlithgow, and Airdrie in returning one member to Parliament, the present representative being John Sinclair, Esq., The Grove, county Antrim. The sheriff court is held in the County Buildings every Monday and Thursday during the session, a justice of peace court and one for the burgh as required, and general county meetings take place in the same edifice on the last day of April and the 29th of September.

The place of worship consist of the parish church, which is in the centre of the main street, and a quoad sacra church at St. Leonards, a church of England in Hope street, an Evangelical Union church in Wesport, two United Presbyterian churches, a Roman Catholic Chapel, and a Free church. In a niche over the eastern door of the parish church is placed a colossal statue of Wallace, executed and presented to the town by I. Forrest, a self-taught genius. In front of this church there has lately been erected, by public subscription, a fountain in commemoration of Her Majesty's Jubilee, 1887. The ruins of the old parish church, which are situated at Wellgate head, on the south-east border of the town, have been deserted for more than one hundred years. Tradition asserts that in this structure, at public worship, the heroic Wallace first saw his subsequently murdered wife. In the cemetery which surrounds the church was interred William Lithgow, a celebrated and eccentric traveller of the reign of James VI. After his peregrinations through a great portion of Europe and Asia, he came home, miserably mutilated and disfigured by the Inquisition, and settled in his native parish till his death. The educational institutions are the Grammar School, Burgh School, and Wilson's Free School, endowed by a lady of that name in the year 1818, for the education of 25 boys and the like number of girls. There are also Board schools at New Lanark, Nauphlar and Cartland village. Lanark has ever possessed considerable attractions for the visitor and the tourist from the beautiful undulating scenery and the romantic grounds at Bonnington and the Falls of Clyde. These are Cora Linn, where the water takes three distinct leaps, making altogether eighty four feet; Bonnington all a little further on; and a third at Stonbyres, about two miles below the town. About a mile to the north of the town is a very old arch, erected either by the Picts or the Romans. A fine view of Cartland bridge, erected in 1822, is obtained here; and Cartland Crags, a deep and rugged chasm, clothed with thick foliage, and formed by a little stream called the Mouse water, will be an interesting object to the visitor. The neighbourhood of Lanark is adorned with many mansions of the nobility and gentry; and at the Lee, the seat of Sir Simon Macdonald Lockhart, who is the principal landowner in the parish, is to be seen the curious stone called the "Lee Penny," which is said to have suggested to Sir Walter Scott the idea of his celebrated novel "The Talisman." Horse races are held on an extensive and excellent course about a mile and a half east of the town. The town is well drained, and has an abundant supply of excellent water, brought from the Tinto range of hills, a distance of seven miles. In the vicinity is a handsome sheet of water called Lanark Loch; its margins have been embanked and planted, and an excellent footway formed close by the water's edge, rendering it an attractive and delightful promenade, much frequented by the inhabitants. Adjacent to this loch is Lanark Moor, used as a golfing green and camping ground for the Lanark Militia. The parish is included in the south (parliamentary) division, which sends one member to Parliament. The present representative is James H. C. Hozier, yr. Esq., of Mauldslie Castle, Lanarkshire. The weekly market day is Monday. Several years ago there were numerous fairs held in the course of the year; but since the establishment of the weekly markets by Messrs. Lawrie and Lymington, many of these have become obsolete; the few that are still observed are as follow:—Fourth Monday in June, rough hogs; first Monday and Tuesday in August, lambs, and on the following Wednesday, horses; on the third week in August, black-faced, cross, and Cheviot lambs; first Monday in September and first Monday in October, both for sheep and lambs. The population of the parish, the area of which is 16,385 statute acres, was in 1871, 7,841; and in 1881, 7,580; and that of the burgh, 5,872.

NEW LANARK is a very neat, regular, and well-built village, about 1 mile S. from Lanark, on the same side of the Clyde as that town. It was founded by Mr. Dale, in 1783, that enterprising gentleman having erected the first of the present range of cotton mills, and constructed a subterranean aqueduct, about one hundred yards in length, through the solid rock, by which means he brought the waters of the Clyde on to the sloping plain on which the mills and the village now stand. The late great (and by many considered mistaken) philanthropist, Owen, was long the principal proprietor of these extensive mills. The works were sold in the spring of 1881, and the new proprietors (the Lanark Spinning Co.) have been busily engaged in introducing the most improved machinery, and also in extending the works to double their former size. The population of the village was in 1881, 706.

KIRKFIELD BANK is a handsome village in the parish of Lesmahagow, situated on the left bank of the Clyde, about a mile and a half from Lanark. The principal occupation of the inhabitants is hand-loom weaving. The scenery in this neighbourhood is very romantic, and frequented by many visitors. There is an Established church and a Board school in the village. Population in 1881, 963.

CARMICHAEL is an agricultural parish, about 4 miles S. of Lanark. The principal landowners are the Earl of Home, Sir Windham C. J. C. Anstruther, Bart., and Morris T. Carmichael, Esq. There is a church and Board school in the parish. Acreage of the parish, 11,514; population in 1881, 770.

LEADHILLS,

CRAWFORD, CRAWFORDJOHN, AND ABINGTON.

LEADHILLS is a village in the parish of Crawford, 46 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 44 s. from Glasgow, 15 S. from Douglas, and 16 N. from Thornhill, situate in the Alpine region, amidst a wilderness of dismal, heathy mountains, on the road from Glasgow to Dumfries. It derives its name from being the residence of workmen employed in the lead mines, which are the most valuable in Scotland, and perhaps in Britain. The mines, which are farmed by a company from the Earl of Hopetoun, have produced in some years 18,000 bars, of nine stone (avoirdupois) the bar; in the year 1809, 25,200 bars were produced, which at £32 per ton (the then price) amounted to £45,360; the ore dug from these mines affords a very liberal proportion of silver. Gold was found in the sand of the mountains at an early period; during the reign of James VI. of Scotland, Sir Bevis Bulmer, a German, by order of Queen Elizabeth, was sent to collect gold dust in the waters of Elvin and Glengonar, with which they were said to abound: he had a house at Wanlockhead, where he deposited the fruits of his labour. The attempt was revived by the late Lord Hopetoun, but soon discontinued, as the product was inadequate to the expense. The miners of Leadhills, during their spare hours, collected 1,000 grains of gold in 1881, and presented it to the Earl of Hopetoun, lord of the manor, on the attainment of his majority. It was at Leadhills that Allan Ramsay, the poet, was born and spent his earliest years. In the village is a good inn, the Hopetoun Arms. Fairs are held on the second Friday of June and the last Friday of October. In 1881 the village contained 1,023 inhabitants.

CRAWFORD is a small village in the parish of its name, 8 miles N.E. from Leadhills, situate on the main road between Glasgow and Carlisle; it contains a good inn and a parish church, a splendid building, erected in 1874. The name is said to be derived from the British compound Craw-ford, signifying the "passage" or the "road of blood;" an appellation supposed to have been obtained from the locality having been the scene of some bloody contest between the people of the country and their Roman invaders. The parish embraces an area of 65,400 acres. Population in 1881, 1,763.

CRAWFORDJOHN is a parish in the upper part of Clydesdale, contiguous to the foregoing parish, and on the east of Muirkirk and Douglas. The small river named Duneaton water takes it rise at the head of the district. On the top of Netherton hill are the vestiges of an extensive encampment, and in other parts of the parish are the ruins of two ancient castles. The village, which is small, is situated about a mile and a half S.W. of the main road, and about 6 miles N. of Leadhills; it contains a parish church and school, and also a Free church. The country around is rich in beautiful, bold, and varied scenery, with lofty hills and flowing streams. In the village are two respectable inns, the Crown and the Colebrooke Arms, and there is also a good library. The acreage of the parish is 26,357, and its population was in 1881, 843.

ABINGTON is a small village in the parish of Crawfordjohn, from which place it is 6 miles E. distant, and is a station on the Caledonian Railway. The only thing worthy of notice here is Abington House, the residence of Sir Thomas Edward Colebrooke, Bart. There are a Free church, a good inn, and a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited.

LESMAHAGOW,

ABBEY GREEN, CROSSFORD, KIRKMUIRHILL, BLACKWOOD, BOGHEAD, AUCHENHEATH, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LESMAHAGOW is a parish and village, the latter, also called ABBEY GREEN, being situated on the river Nethan, one of the tributaries of the Clyde, and in the upper ward of Lanarkshire. It is a beautiful village, almost in the centre of the parish, 38 miles W. from Edinburgh, by 23 S.E. from Glasgow, and six S.W. from Lanark. It takes its name from the old priory, on the site of which the present Established church was erected by the heritors of the parish in 1803. The old priory was founded by David I. in the year 1140, and dedicated by him to St. Machute. An annual fair was formerly held on the 15th of November, at Lesmahagow, entitled St. Machute's Fair, but this is now discontinued. The parish of Lesmahagow is very extensive, being twelve miles square, and is one of the richest in minerals in Scotland; coal, ironstone and limestone being obtained in large quantities. In obtaining and working these minerals a considerable number of the inhabitants find employment The transit of the minerals is facilitated by means of a railway, which, south of Lesmahagow, is for mineral traffic only. It passes through or near most of the mines, and joins the Caledonian main line at Motherwell. The British Linen Co. Bank and the Royal Bank of Scotland have branches here. Lesmahagow village contains three comfortable inns, the Abbey Green, the Commercial, and the Masons' Arms, all of which are posting houses. Besides the parish church, there are a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and some well-conducted schools.

The noble ruins of Craignethan, or Draphane Castle, the property of the Earl of Home, of Douglas, and immortalised by Sir Walter Scott as Tillietudlem Castle, in his novel of "Old Mortality," are well deserving the notice of the tourist. A room is still shown where, it is said, the unfortunate Queen Mary took refuge after her escape from Lochleven Castle. There are two hiring fairs held, and two others for general business, during the year. In the month of December are three market days, known as BIG Wednesdays. The parish of Lesmahagow embraces an area of 41,299 statute acres, and contained in 1881, a population of 9,949.

CROSSFORD is a village situated in a beautiful valley on the left bank of the river Clyde, near the confluence of the Nethan and that river. It is about 5 miles N. by E. from Abbey Green, and 4½ N.W. from Lanark. There are a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and a public school. Population in 1881, 816.

KIRKMUIRHILL and BLACKWOOD are villages adjacent to each other, about three miles N.W. from Abbey Green, on the Glasgow road. There is a commodious public school and railway station at the latter place, and a United Presbyterian church at the former. BOGHEAD is a small village about a mile and half distant from Kirkmuirhill. AUCHENHEATH, a mining village and a railway station, is about 2½ miles N. from Abbey Green. Populations in 1881: Kirkmuirhill, 547; Auchenheath, 612.

MOTHERWELL,

CARFIN, DALZIEL, NEWARTHILL, NEW STEVENSTON, OMOA, CLELAND, AND CRAIGNEUK.

MOTHERWELL is a police burgh and post town, situated for the greater part in the parish of DALZIEL, and middle ward of Lanarkshire, 2 miles N.E. from Hamilton, and 11 S.E. from Glasgow. Within the recollection of persons still living, Motherwell had no existance as a village. Its name is derived from three farms, called respectively High, Low, and North Motherwell, and these doubtless received their designation from an adjoining spring called Ladywell or Motherwell. Within the last few years the progress of Motherwell has been very rapid. It owes its prosperity in a great extent to the coal mines in its neighbourhood. In November, 1887, a handsome Town Hall was opened, the cost of erection being about £7,000. There are several extensive works here, the two largest being those of Messrs. David Colville and Sons, and the Glasgow Iron and Steel Co., Limited, each of which employ over 1,000 hands. The places of worship comprise, besides the parish church of Dalziel, one of the Establishment, an E. U., a Free, and two United Presbyterian churches, and Primitive Methodist, Baptist, and Roman Catholic chapels. There are branches of the Bank of Scotland, British Linen Co., the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited. The town is supplied with water from Coldstream, near Carluke, and the streets are lighted with gas. Motherwell is a principal station and junction on the Caledonian Railway. The parish of Dalziel has an area of 3,049 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 13,853. The population of the burgh in 1881 was 12,904, but is now (1889) estimated at 17,698.

CARFIN is a small village in the parish of Bothwell, one mile distant from and in the postal delivery of Motherwell. Several collieries, a boiler works, and a chemical works are in the district, and there is also a station on the Caledonian Railway. Population in 1881, 1,428.

NEWARTHILL is a village also in the parish of Bothwell, posta delivery of Motherwell, about 2½ miles distant. The United Presbyterians have a place of worship here. Population in 1881, 1,355.

CRAIGNEUK is a small mining village in the Motherwell posta district, situate about one mile from that town.

NEW STEVENSTON is a village in the parish of Bothwell, half a mile distant from Holytown. There is a Free church here.

OMOA is a village in the parish of Shotts and postal delivery of Motherwell, about 3 miles distant therefrom, and is a station on the Caledonian Railway. Several collieries, an iron foundry, a boiler works, stone quarries and brick works are the main support of the district.

CLELAND is a large village in the parish of Shotts, and posta delivery of Motherwell, from which place it is 3½ miles distant There are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a Board school here. In 1881 Cleland and Omoa together contained a population of 1,503 persons.

STRATHAVEN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF GLASSFORD AND STONEHOUSE, AND THE VILLAGES OF WEST QUARTER AND CHAPELTON.

STRATHAVEN is a market town and burgh of barony, in the parish of AVONDALE, 44 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 15 S. by E. from Glasgow, 28 N.E. from Ayr, 21 E. by N. from Kilmarnock, 14 W. from Lanark, and 7½ S.W. from Hamilton, situate on the river Avon. The town is of considerable antiquity, but possesses no pretension to elegance in its dwellings, or uniformity in the arrangement of them. Like many other towns, not only in the British Islands, but throughout the European continent, it seems to have been indebted for its origin to the feudal era, when every chieftain had his castle or fortress, for safety or aggression; the ruins of one of these frowning edifices, presenting "shattered and haggard walls," stand on an eminence to the south, overhanging Strathaven. The excellent breed of horses for which Lanarkshire is so much distinguished was introduced to this vicinity, upwards of a century ago, by a Duke of Hamilton, who brought some fine horses from Holstein, and placed them in the parks attached to the castle; from this origin the race of draught cattle was propagated over the entire district. The offspring of the cow has also conferred distinction on this town. The herbage of the neighbourhood is supposed to be of a highly nutritious quality, and peculiarly adapted for the improvement of the flesh and milk of cattle; in consequence of this Strathaven veal has long been held in high estimation. Strathaven is not a place of much trade, the most prominent branches are cheese and grain dealing and the weaving of silk and cotton goods; there are two or three respectable inns and posting houses, and three branch banking establishments. The town was erected into a burgh of barony in the year 1450 in favour of the then powerful chief, William Earl of Douglas, and is governed by a baron bailie. Besides the Established church, there are three United Presbyterian churches, a Free church, and a Baptist and a Roman Catholic chapel. A well built and commodious school has been erected by the School Board. On the south side of the river Avon a Roman road can be distinctly traced for several miles. The market, which is held on Thursday, is well attended; fairs are held on the first Thursdays in January, March, and April for cattle and hiring servants; Thursday in Whitsun week, the last Thursday in June, and the second Thursday in August, and (the old fair) on the 2nd of November. The parish of Avondale embraces an area of 37,666 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population of 5,466, of which Strathaven contained 3,812.

GLASSFORD is a parish of 6,442 acres, in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, situate on the road between Kilbride and Strathaven. There are two villages in the parish named WEST QUARTER and CHAPELTON; at the former are the parish church and school, and at the latter a Free church and school, and an Established church. Population in 1881, 1,452.

STONEHOUSE is a parish and village in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, situate on the south side of the Avon, 8 miles S.E. from Hamilton. The inhabitants of the village are mostly engaged in hand-loom weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers, and mining. There are places of worship for members of the Establishment, and the Free and United Presbyterian churches. The village contains three schools, which are well attended. Acreage of the parish, 6,241; population in 1881, 3,173.

WISHAW,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BENHAR, BONKLE, CAMBUSNETHAN, CHAPEL, DYKEHEAD, HARTHILL, MORNINGSIDE, NEW MAINS, OVERTOWN, SHOTTS, STANE, WATERLOO, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

WISHAW is a police burgh and an endowed parish in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, 15 miles S.E. from Glasgow, and 32 miles W. from Edinburgh. Wishaw formerly formed part of the parish of Cambusnethan, from which it has been disjointed as an ecclesiastical division, though it still forms part of the parish for parochial purposes. It was made a burgh under the Scotch Police Act of 1850. The 1862 Act was after its passing adopted, and the burgh is now governed under that Act by three magistrates and nine commissioners. It has been extended, and now includes within its limits the village of CAMBUSNETHAN. The town is pleasantly situated on the face of a hill, and is formed of several spacious streets, Main street being the principal one. The shops are well stocked, and would do credit to towns of greater pretentions. A police court is held at the Town Hall as occasion requires. The Established church, in Main street, is a large building, with a spire and clock. The Free Church and United Presbyterian church have each erected new and commodious edifices. The Reformed Presbyterians have a neat church off Main street, and there are other places of worship belonging to the Baptists, Evangelical Union, Primitive Methodists, and Christian Brethren. The Roman Catholics have a large and beautiful church, in Young street, with schools in connection. The branch banks are the British Linen Company, Clydesdale Bank, Limited, Royal Bank of Scotland, and the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited. There are several schools, the principal being the Wishaw Academy, and the public school; there is also a public library. About forty years ago, previous to the opening of the district by railway, Wishaw was a place of little importance, but since then, owing to the increased facilities offered for the despatch of the produce of this district, it has advanced with great rapidity. A newspaper, the Wishaw Press, is published here weekly. The staple trade of the district is coal, of which mineral there is upwards of one million tons sent from Wishaw annually. Among the establishments which give employment to a great number of workmen are the Wishaw Iron and Steel Works, two iron foundries, the fire clay works of Messrs. W. Hudspith & Co., the distillery of Messrs. J. M. Mackenzie & Co., the malleable iron works of Messrs. John Williams & Co., the Belhaven Iron and Steel Nail Works, the Pather Iron and Steel Co. Limited, and the railway wagon and axle works of Messrs. R. Y. Pickering & Co. Limited. There are large cattle sales every Tuesday and Thursday, conducted by Messrs. J. & J. Marshall, auctioneers, Carluke. The gentlemen's seats in the neighbourhood are numerous—Wishaw Castle, being the seat of the late Lord Belhaven; Allanton House, Sir Alan Henry Seton-Steuart, Bart.; Coltness House, James Houldsworth, Esq.; Cambusnethan House, the seat of Major-General Lockhart, C.B.; Garrion Tower, the residence of James Scott, Esq., and Murdostoun Castle, the seat of Robert King Stewart, Esq. About two miles S.W. from the town and near to the Clyde is an ancient grave yard, the burial place of the Lords of Belhaven and Stenton, and it is said that the original parish church stood upon this site, but no trace of it whatever now remains. In the graveyard stands an elegant memorial tomb of the late Lord Belhaven, who died in 1868. It was erected by his widow, and is a handsome structure of freestone, with tablets of granite on three of its sides, upon one of which are recorded the dates of birth and decease of the late nobleman. The others are inscribed with scriptural texts, &c. It stands about twenty eight feet in height, and is about twenty feet wide at the base, and is elaborately sculptured throughout. In the graveyard are many memorials, rudely but curiously carved, and denoting considerable antiquity. Amongst them may be noted a headstone with the following inscription:—"Here lyes Arthur Ingis, in Nethertoun, who was shot at Stockelton Dyke, by bloody Graham, of Claversehouse, July, 1679, for his adherence to the work of God and Scotland's covenanted work of reformation. Rev. XII. II., erected in the year 1733." The reverse of the stone bears a rhyming epitaph of eight lines. Several of the gravestones bear lengthwise the simple device of a sword. There are also memorials to Sir James Stuart Denham, Bart., and his consort, erected by their son, General Sir James Stuart, Bart. In 1871 the burgh of Wishaw had a population of 8,812, which in 1881 had increased to 13,112.

CAMBUSNETHAN is a parish, the village being about a mile E. from Wishaw, with which burgh it is now incorporated. The ancient parish church is situated here, and is surrounded by a burial ground. The former is now an ivy grown ruin, and has long been disused, but interments still take place in the graveyard, which has been greatly extended and is tastefully kept. The present church, a modern edifice with square tower, is in close proximity, as are also the Board schools. There is also a Free church in the village. The parish of Cambusnethan embraces an area of 16,608 statute acres, and in 1871 had a population of 20,326, and in 1881, 20,823 persons.

BONKLE is a village in Cambusnethan parish, situated three miles E. from Wishaw. Allanton House, a seat of Sir Alan Henry Seton-Steuart, is in the village. There is an United Presbyterian church here.

MORNINGSIDE is a village in Cambusnethan parish, lying about 2 miles E. from Wishaw. There are stations here upon the North British and Caledonian railways, and collieries of the Morningside Coal Co. and Mr. Thomas Gray, and an iron and brass foundry; the manufacture of drain pipes, fire-clay and terra cotta goods is carried on by Messrs. London and Russell, whose works are very extensive. There is a Board school in the village. Population in 1881, 740.

CHAPEL is a hamlet adjoining Morningside, the inhabitants of which are chiefly employed in the adjacent collieries. Population in 1881, 414.

NEW MAINS is a considerable village in Cambusnethan parish, about 2 miles E. from Wishaw, and is a station on the Caledonian line; in it are situated the extensive works of the Coltness Iron Company, Limited, who have twelve blast furnaces in operation, producing over 2,000 tons of pig iron weekly. Commodious schools have been erected by the company for the education of the children of their workpeople. The Coltness Memorial church was erected by James Houldsworth, Esq., of Coltness, in memory of his eldest son. The village has a neat appearance, the streets being regularly formed; and the inhabitants are supplied with gas by the company. The village is now provided with an excellent water supply by the local authority of Cambusnethan. There is also a school for Roman Catholics. Population in 1881, 3,000.

OVERTOWN is a village in the same parish, 2 miles S.E. from Wishaw, and is a station on the Caledonian line. There is an Established church in the village, and schools maintained by the Coltness Iron Company, Limited, also a school for Roman Catholics. Population in 1881, 1,293.

SHOTTS is a large and extensive parish, with a station on the Caledonian railway, six miles N. from Wishaw, bordering on Stane, and includes the villages of HARTHILL, BENHAR, and DYKEHEAD. The Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited have a branch at Shotts. There is also a fine hotel close to the station. In all the above places coal and iron works are the sole support of the inhabitants. Acreage 24,944. Population of the parish in 1881, 11,214.

STANE is a thriving and populous village about 7 miles N. from Wishaw, bordering on Shotts. In the village are the extensive works of the Shotts Iron Company, who employ over 2,400 hands. There are places of worship for the Established church, Evangelical Unionists and Roman Catholics, and there is also a Board school. There is a station on the Caledonian line close to the village, which, in 1881, had a population of 911.

LINLITHGOWSHIRE,

OR WEST LOTHIAN, is a small county, of a very irregular figure, lying on the south shore of the Firth of Forth, having Edinburghshire on the east and south-east, Lanarkshire on the south-west, and Stirlingshire on the west. The Briech and the Almond waters form the boundary line betwixt this county and that of Edinburgh, except Mid-Calder, where the latter intrudes more than a mile into Linlithgowshire. From east to west (that is, along the shore of the Forth), the county extends sixteen miles; along the south-eastern boundary (or from Queensferry to its most eastern point) it measures about twenty. It comprises an area of 127 square miles, or 81,114 acres, and in point of size ranks as the thirtieth, and in population as the nineteenth of Scotch counties.

EARLY HISTORY.—Much that is applicable to the antiquities of and historical events connected with this county has been already sufficiently detailed in the annals of Edinburgshire and the capital—the district having formed at an early period a portion of the province of Lothian possessed by the Anglo-Saxons; some few particulars, more distinctly referable to this county, may, however, be here added. The Gadenii tribe of British people being overrun by the Romans, the latter formed a firm but not permanent settlement in the shire; the subjugated nations of the world had snapped their fetters—they even menaced the extinction of the Roman name; the legions were recalled to avert the catastrophe, and Britain was left exposed to the devastations of her more ferocious neighbours. During the residence of the Romans in West Lothian, which was the outermost part of their conquest in this direction, they gave a site to the wall which they built across the island. No part of Valentia was so well protected by forts. From the station at Cramond, a Roman road proceeded westward, along the shore of the Forth to Carriden, where the wall terminated; and along the sea-shore were several posts, which, according to old Historians, were strengthened by towers. In modern times a variety of urns, coins, and other relics of the Romans have been discovered in the shire. It is understood that after the departure of the Romans, and a good deal later, this part of Lothian became occupied by the Scoto-Irish and Northern adventurers, in greater numbers than in that portion now called Edinburghshire.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The aggregate surface of Linlithgowshire is neither flat nor hilly. The most remarkable protuberances form a range running obliquely across the middle of the county. The central and western parts have the most hilly ground, while on the east and south the land is mostly level. The elevations are generally well clothed with verdure and ornamental woods; about one-third of the whole county is either woodland or old pasture, laid down with artificial grasses; and there are more than four-fifths of the shire enclosed. Until the year 1723 there was little improvement in the agriculture of the district; soon after this period, John, Earl of Stair, introduced new and advantageous modes of husbandry, and commenced the cultivation of the cabbage, turnip, and carrot by the plough; the example of this nobleman was beneficially followed by Charles, first Earl of Hopetoun; but both dying, thirty years elapsed before agricultural spirit was again actively displayed. In more recent times, some practical farmers, possessing the advantages of skill and capital, have brought the cultivation of the shire to comparative perfection; and now this rich and lovely district participates in the general improvements of Southern Caledonia. With the exception of Cairnapie, in the parish of Torphichen, which rises about fifteen hundred feet above the level of the sea, the mountains of this district are not of great altitude, nor are they numerous—Binnie Craig and Cockleroe are the only other eminences that attract notice; they are respectively about five hundred feet high.

MINERALS AND MANUFACTURES.—Linlithgowshire contains a store of minerals of the most useful kind. Coal abounds throughout, limestone is equally prevalent, in some parts ironstone is also found in profusion, and the whole surface seems to rest on a bed of sandstone of the finest quality; silver and lead mines were formerly wrought, and there is plenty of marl, potters' clay, brick clay and red chalk. Many places present volcanic appearances, particularly at Dundas Hill, in the parish of Dalmeny, where there is a bold front of basaltic rocks, exhibiting in some instances columns of that character. This is the richest district in Scotland for the production of shale, from which paraffin oil is extracted, and for the manufacture of which very extensive works are in operation in the neighbourhood of Bathgate, Linlithgow, Uphall, and Whitburn. Besides this branch of trade, there are also large iron and steel foundries, paper mills, distilleries, chemical works, and brick, tile, and earthenware manufactories.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—The only river of consequence is the Almond, or Amond, but there are a number of considerable rivulets and burns, and the Forth yields advantages which amply compensate for the deficiency of river navigation. The Almond rises in the high grounds of Lanarkshire, and, pursuing a north-easterly course, falls into the sea at Cramond; at its mouth it assumes the appearance of a small loch or arm of the sea, running up the bottom of a woody ravine; but it is not navigable except for a very short distance, and that only for boats and very small sloops. The main line of RAILWAY that passes through this county is the Edinburgh and Glasgow section of the North British line. Bathgate and Uphall are communicated with by the Edinburgh and Bathgate branch line, Bo'ness by the Monkland section, Linlithgow by the Edinburgh and Glasgow section, Whitburn by the Morningside section—all from the main line. The erection of the Forth Bridge at Queensferry, connecting this county with Fifeshire by rail, will, no doubt, on its completion, greatly benefit the commerce on which Linlithgowshire at present so much depends.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—This county was probably separated into the sheriffdom in the reign of David I. It was placed by Robert, however, under the administration of a constable, and so it continued until the time of James IV. No other district appears to have been so divided into petty baronies, bailieries, regalities and other independent jurisdictions, nor so domineered over by a number of peers inimical to peace and regardless of justice. The oldest family in the shire is that of Dundas, who can trace an unbroken line of descent and residence on the same spot up to the reign of William the Lion (1165), an antiquity rarely to be found surpassed, not only in Scotland, but in any other country. Linlithgowshire comprises eleven parishes and two parts of parishes, which with two in Mid-Lothian and four in Stirlingshire, form one presbytery. It contains two royal burghs, namely, Linlithgow and Queensferry; the next largest town is Bathgate. Its seaport is Bo'ness, and there are a number of thriving villages. The lord-lieutenant is the Earl of Rosebery. The burghs of Linlithgow, Hamilton, Lanark, Airdrie, and Falkirk, in conjunction, send one member to the Imperial Parliament, and the shire at large another. The member at present sitting for the shire is Peter M'Lagan, Esq., of Pumpherston. The Parliamentary constituency for 1888-89 is 7,030. According to the census returns for 1871, the county contained a population of 40,965 inhabitants, and by those for 1881, 43,510, showing an increase in ten years of 2,545. The valuation of the county for 1888-89 is (exclusive of railways and canals), £241,054, and of railways and canals, £30,129.

BATHGATE,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF ARMADALE, TORPHICHEN, BLACKRIDGE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BATHGATE is a market town, an independent burgh of barony, and a parish; situated on the middle road betwixt Edinburgh and Glasgow, 18 miles W. from the former, 24 E. from the latter, and 7 S. from Linlithgow. It is a station on the Bathgate branch of the Edinburgh and Glasgow and Monklands sections of the North British Railway. Another line is completed to Airdrie, Bo'ness, &c., joining the North British line at Manuel. The town occupies a pleasant site, near the southern base of a great ridge of hills extending across the county, and sheltering the town on the north and east; while it has a fine southern exposure, and is seen at a considerable distance from that direction and from the west. These hills abound with limestone quarries, in which are found fine specimens of fossil remains. Visitors from America, &c., who a few years ago were geologising in the district procured some rare specimens. Bathgate lays claim to high antiquity. Malcom IV. granted to the monks of Holyrood the church at Bathkel, with the land belonging to it. At one period the town and its adjoining lands formed part of the ample possessions of King Robert Bruce, which, in 1306, he gave as a dowry to his daughter Marjory, on her marriage with Walter, the Great Stewart, and this marriage introduced the Stewart family to the throne of Scotland. The town, which is lighted with gas by a joint stock company, and abundantly supplied with water of an excellent quality by water works, costing £6,000, consists of a new and an old part, the former being well built. Few places of it size can show so much bustle and tidiness, and the town is considered to be very healthy. Bathgate was made a burgh of barony by Charles II. in 1661, and was created a free and independent burgh of barony by Act of Parliament in 1824, and placed under the control of a provost, three bailies, twelve councillors, a treasurer, a town clerk, and a procurator fiscal. It has now adopted Provost Lindsay's Police Act of 1862, and is governed by twelve commissioners. The sheriff holds small debt courts here once a quarter. Young's Paraffin Light & Mineral Oil Company, Limited, and the West Lothian Oil Company, Limited, have each extensive works in the vicinity of the town, and an iron foundry, two spade and shovel works and a glass works, are in the town, and a large distillery near to it. At Westfield, about two and a half miles distant, is the extensive mill of Messrs. James Stewart and Co. paper manufacturers, affording occupation for a large number of hands. The weaving of goods for the Glasgow manufacturers, which at one time employed many hands, is now only carried on to a very limited extent. On the north border of the parish, the silver mine workings were a few years ago re-opened. These were once greatly esteemed, and the precious metal smelted not far from the spot before being coined. James VI. took a great interest in the concern, although history tells us, not much to his profit. Mr. Henry Aitken (of the firm of Messrs. Russell and Son), the renowned coal master, obtained a lease of the mines from the Earl of Hopetoun, the proprietor, but after earnest research found them to be unprofitable.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free, a United Presbyterian and Evangelical Union churches, and also a Roman Catholic chapel, all of which have a manse or residence for the minister. The old parish church, which was erected about 1737, having got into a bad state of repair, and been for some time inadequate for the accommodation of the increased number of inhabitants, was taken down in 1882, and a new building erected on the same site. It was built conjointly by assessment of the heritors of the parish and by voluntary subscriptions, and cost upwards of £8,000. The new church, which was opened in 1884, is a handsome edifice of stone, with hall and vestry adjoining, and for the greater part in the Norman style of architecture, a massive grandeur being given to the whole erection by a square tower, which rises from the south-west corner to a height of 108 feet, terminating in crocketted pinnacles at the corners. The tower carries a clock and bell, the munificent gifts of John Waddell, Esq., of Inch, and ex-provost of the burgh of Bathgate, the estimated cost of which was over £250. The clock, which is placed at an elevation of 90 feet, has an illuminated dial, and is seen from a great distance in all directions. The interior of the church has a pleasing and comfortable appearance. The whole of the internal woodwork, with the exception of the pulpit, is of pitch pine. There is a gallery, which is carried continuously round three sides of the church, and the east gable is relieved by a circular apse, in which have been placed five memorial stained glass windows, very fine in design and colour, giving tone and richness to the light, and much enhancing the general effect of the interior. The total accommodation is about 1,100 sittings. The burgh boasts of a superior educational institution in the Bathgate Academy, endowed by the late John Newland, of Kingston, Jamaica, a native of this town. The sum bequeathed by this gentleman amounted, previous to the erection of this building, to between £16,000 and £17,000. The Academy stands on a commanding and healthy site in the immediate vicinity of the town, and is an elegant and extensive structure; it comprises seven large class-rooms library-room, trustees' room, and janitor's house. The courses of education are conducted on the most approved systems by a rector, and a number of teachers. It is now under Government inspection, and is managed by trustees, one of whom represents the lord of the manor, and another is appointed by the Commissioners. The youth of the parish have thus the benefit of first-rate instruction in all the useful and many of the more learned branches, while others, not parishioners, are admitted at the discretion of the trustees. The Bathgate Board School, which is situated near the Academy, has a handsome appearance, and is numerously attended. There are three bank branches, viz.: the National, the Royal and the Union Bank, and a Savings Bank. The principal commercial and posting establishments are Stewart's and Gibson's Hotels, where commercial men and others will find ample accommodation. The market day is Tuesday, when a large supply of grain of all kinds is brought from the surrounding country. The buyers and sellers are accommodated in a splendid building erected in Jarvey street, called the Corn Exchange. The building also contains spacious rooms for courts and for other public meetings. The following eminent men were born in the parish: Dr. John Fleming, professor of natural science, Aberdeen; Dr. John Reid, professor of anatomy, St. Andrews; and the celebrated Sir James Simpson, Bart., whose reputation is European. The authorities of the burgh are entitled to hold (by Act of Parliament) seven annual fairs—namely, on the third Wednesdays in April, July and August, on the first Wednesdays after Whit-Sunday and Martinmas (o.s.), and the fourth Wednesdays in June and October; the Whitsuntide and Martinmas fairs are the principal, and are well attended by cattle dealers. The parish of Bathgate embraces an area of 10,876 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 9,450, of which the town possessed 4,887.

ARMADALE is a village in the parish of and 2 miles W. from Bathgate, on the main road from Edinburgh to Glasgow. It is in a flourishing state, being situated amongst large fields of ironstone, gas coal, common coal, &c., and is well supplied with gas by a public company. It is a police burgh, with nine commissioners. The village takes its name from an estate long the property of Sir William Honeyman, a senator of the College of Justice, under the title of Lord Armadale. The places of worship in the village are a quoad sacra Established church, a Free church, an Episcopal church, and a Wesleyan Methodist chapel. A railway passing near to the village offers facilities for mineral traffic; and Armadale is a station on the Western section of the North British Railway. Several thriving hamlets surround the village. The mining villages of DURHAMTOWN, POLKEMMET and BATHVILLE are also situated in the parish. Population of Armadale in 1881, 2,642.

TORPHICHEN is a parish and village, the latter on the road from Bathgate to Linlithgow, 2½ miles N. by W. from Bathgate, and 4½ S.W. by S. from Linlithgow. It is a place of great antiquity, and was once of importance; but it has now an entirely rural character, and presents a straggling, yet pleasant, appearance. Adjacent to the village, on the north east, are some remains of the hospital or preceptory of Torphichen, the principal Scottish residence of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem; of the church of the preceptory, the chancel and the nave are entirely gone, and only the choir and the transept remain. The nave is traditionally reported to have been of great length; but its site is now occupied by and edifice of a very different character, the plain modern parish church. There is also a Free church, said to be one of the first Free churches in Scotland. In the village is an excellent Board school, conducted by efficient teachers. The parish, although in some parts rather moorish, is generally fertile; coal and ironstone are found within it, and there are brick and tile works and a paper mill within its bounds. Acreage of the parish, 9,939. Population in 1881, 1,526.

BLACKRIDGE is a small hamlet in the parish of Torphichen, about 5½ miles W. from Bathgate, on the Edinburgh and Glasgow road, seated in an agricultural district. A Free church is situated in the village, and a school near to it.

BORROWSTOUNNESS,

AND THE PARISH OF CARRIDEN, WITH THE VILLAGES OF GRANGE PANS, MUIRHOUSES, BRIDGENESS, BLACKNESS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BORROWSTOUNNESS (or, as it is now generally pronounced Bo'ness), is an ancient sea-port, burgh of barony and parish, bounded on the north by the Firth of Forth, on the south by the parish of Linlithgow, on the east by Carriden, and on the west by the river Avon, which seperates it from Stirlingshire. Its length eastward is about four miles and its average breadth is about two. The town is 18 miles W. from Edinburgh, 9 W. from Queensferry, 3½ N. from Linlithgow, 8 from Falkirk, and 5 E. from Grangemouth. It is situated on the south shore of the Firth of Forth, on a piece of low ground or ness, and consists principally of two streets, running eastward, terminating in one of nearly the same length, the greater portion of the houses forming which appear to be of very old date. Between 1750 and 1780 Bo'ness was one of the most thriving towns on the east coast, and ranked as the third port in Scotland; but when the junction of the Forth & Clyde, was affected by means of the great canal, Grangemouth situated at the east end of the canal, became the chief seat of commerce, and in 1810 was erected into a seperate port, with a custom house. The trade of Bo'ness then greatly declined. It is the seat of a custom house, whose district extends on both sides of the Forth from Cramond Water and Donibristle Point to the boundaries of the ports of Grangemouth, and Alloa. The Harbour Commissioners, in 1875, to enable the port to compete with other ports on the Firth of Forth, took in consideration the necessity of improving and extending the harbour, so as to afford accommodation and facilities to the larger class of vessels which now carry on the trade of the country, and, with this object in view, obtained an Act of Parliament giving them ample powers, not only to extend the tidal harbour, but also to construct a wet dock. In 1876, under the provisions and powers of this Act of Parliment, they, in the first instance, constructed a new pier, and immediately after a wet dock, of 7½ acres in extent, at a cost of £200,000, which was finished towards the end of 1881; and since it was opened, in December of that year, it has been the means of drawing a large and steadily increasing trade to the port. In connection with the dock a considerable addition was made to the old harbour—the quays were rebuilt and the area extended from 2½ to 5½ acres, and the depth of water largely increased. The extent of the quayage in the dock is 2,400 feet, and in the harbour 1,900 feet. The dock and relative works are of the most substantial character, and have been furnished throughout with hydraulic machinery of the most modern description, and the lines of railways on the quays are in direct communication with the lines of the North British Railway Company's system, thus affording access to and from all parts of the United Kingdom. The trade of the port consists chiefly of imports of timber, esparto grass, grain, iron ore, phosphate, &c., and the exports are coal, iron and general goods. Direct steamers between here and London sail once a week. Ample standage for coal wagons, three miles in length, and worked by self-acting gradients, has been provided to facilitate in every possible way the quick shipment of cargo and bunker coal at the coal hoists. The hydraulic appliances consist of three coal-shipping hoists, each capable of shipping 2,000 tons of coal per day of 24 hours, or 6,000 tons by all the hoists. Six portable cranes, each capable of lifting two tons, three of which can at one time be applied to the discharge of the same vessel, capstans for hauling ships into and out of the dock, and wagon capstans for working the movable traffic on the quays of the dock, &c., large sheds in which are fitted hydraulic cranes for lifting goods, are also provided for the storage of cargoes. The Monkland section of the North British Railway terminates at the harbour. At KINNEIL, about half a mile westward, are extensive ironworks, including four blast furnaces for smelting the ore, with which, as well as that of coal, the Kinneil estate abounds; but the stagnation of the iron trade during the past few years has caused the furnaces to lie idle. Borrowstounness at one time was one of the chief places on the Forth for the manufacture of salt, but now that product is not so extensive y made. Amongst the chief industries of the place may be mentioned an extensive distillery, earthenware manufactories, chemical manure works, and several iron foundries. Branches of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the Royal Bank of Scotland, are established in the town. The Duke of Hamilton is superior of the burgh, the government being vested in a body of trustees. Kinneil House, one of the family seats of the Duke of Hamilton, is the most remarkable building in the parish. Here the celebrated Watt realised some of his earliest improvements upon the steam engine; and Professor Dugald Stewart was the last tenant. The barony of Kinneil is one of the most ancient possessions of the house of Hamilton. The Roman wall of Antonius, commonly called "Graham's Dyke," passes through the parish; and within a short distance of the town to the south-east the traces of the Roman camp are still visible. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and one for the United Presbyterians, which was opened January, 1885, and cost £3,700. The church, which is a conspicuous ornament to the town, and is erected on an elevated site, has a handsome tower rising to a height of 130 feet, enriched with open terminal crown and spirelet, decorated with quaintly carved crockets, and surmounted with a gilded weather cock terminal. It is of Gothic architecture, will seat 620 persons, and is divided into nave and aisles, having a gallery on three sides and a recess provided for an organ. The interior is handsomely decorated, and the windows are all of stained glass. Attached to the church is a hall capable of seating 170 persons, with session house, vestry, ladies' room, &c. Messrs. Kissack and Rowan, of Glasgow, were the architects. A new Established church has lately been erected, towards which the Duke of Hamilton subscribed £4,000. There are several schools under the School Board. The village of BORROWSTOUN lies about a mile inland from Bo'ness. The parish of Bo'ness has an area of 3,146 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 6,088, of which the town contained 5,284.

The parish of CARRIDEN is bounded by Bo'ness on the west, Abercorn on the east, and Linlithgow on the south; it lies on the south bank of the Forth, and is not more than two miles in length by one in breadth. The whole district is well enclosed and cultivated. This and the adjoining parish of Bo'ness were amongst the first localities in Scotland in which coal was found. At present mining operations in coal are carried on very extensively. The other branches of trade form part of what is given as regards Bo'ness. Within the parish of Carriden, besides its own village, are those of GRANGE PANS, MUIRHOUSES, BRIDGENESS and BLACKNESS; the latter, which in former times, previous to the rise of Bo'ness, from local advantages was a harbour of considerable importance, was also celebrated for its castle, which, during the reign of James VI., was the principal state prison in Scotland, and as such received within its gloomy walls many distinguished persons; one of the most remarkable of its prisoners was Lord Ochiltree, who for accusing the Marquis of Hamilton of aspiring to the Scottish crown was here confined during nearly the whole reign of Charles I.—upwards of twenty years, and was not liberated until the country fell under the dominion of Cromwell.

Blackness Castle is one of the ancient fortresses whose preservation was guaranteed by the Act of Union. The edifice was converted to the purpose of a barrack in the course of a long protracted war. From the continued agitation of the city of Edinburgh, the Government some time ago altered, repaired, and fitted up this castle as a powder magazine or depot, with barracks attached for accommodating a company of soldiers in charge of the magazine, stores and premises. A small pier has also been erected for shipping and landing stores at the castle. The pier of Bridgeness affords good accommodation for small vessels employed in the exportation of salt, coals, &c. At Grange, the residence of Henry M. Cadell, Esq., the proprietor, are extensive collieries. Within the parish of Carriden, and a mile east of Grange, is Carriden House. The place of worship is the parish church. There is a public school and one for girls, with an infants' school at Grange Pans. Colonel Gardiner was born at Burnfoot, in this parish. Acreage of the parish of Carriden, 2,705; population in 1881, 1,989.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,

ON THE MONKLAND SECTION OF THE NORTH BRITISH LINE.

Station, Bo'ness—Robert Wilson Dott, station master

LINLITHGOW,

MUIRAVONSIDE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LINLITHGOW (popularly pronounced Lithgow) is an ancient royal burgh, the capital of the shire and parish of its name, and the seat of the presbytery of Linlithgow; 16 miles W. from Edinburgh, 31 E. by N. from Glasgow, 8 E. from Falkirk, and three and a half from Bo'ness; seated on the bank of a fine lake, and on the Edinburgh and Glasgow section of the North British railway, for which line a principal station is established here. It is chiefly formed of a single street, which runs east and west along the south edge of the water. Some of the houses in the town still possess the characteristic feature of the Scotch style of architecture, but many of the older specimens have within the last few years been replaced by more modern tenements. The town, however, still possesses a variety of objects that cannot fail to interest the attentive traveller, and impress the mind with an idea of its ancient grandeur. Amongst these are the magnificent ruins of its royal palace, the venerable church adjoining, and the terraced promontory on which both edifices were erected. The palace is a quadrangular building, enclosing a spacious open court, and occupies the site of a Roman castle. The castle was razed and re-erected by Edward I. of England; and of this structure there still exist three round towers on the east side of the palace, and which have been used as abutments for supporting the massive east wall of the palace. The palace was a favourite hunting scene of the Stuart dynasty; and was enlarged and enriched by nearly all these princes. James IV. was particularly attached to his Linlithgow residence, and in the poem of "Marmion," Scott has vividly depicted the bustle and gaiety of the Court there. Mary Stuart, the lovely and unfortunate Queen of Scots, was born in a room on the west side the palace on December 5th, 1542; but there are few other noteworthy incidents connected with it. In the centre of the palace quadrangle may be seen the shattered remains of a beautiful fountain, exquisitely and elaborately carved by Italian artists, who were brought over by one of the Stuarts. A restoration of this fountain was made by the late Mr. Matheson, of her Majesty's Board of Works, and it now adorns the west front of Holyrood House. This fountain was supplied with water from the estate of Preston, about a mile distant, and the pipes leading to it were discovered in digging a drain in the Carmelite Friars' lands on the south side of the town. The church is a beautiful example of later Gothic architecture. The nave and transept are richly carved and ornamented, but the choir and apse are of a more recent and inferior style. At the west end there is a massive square tower and belfry, which, till the beginning of the present century, was surmounted by a crown, something in the style of St. Giles's, Edinburgh. There is a fine peal of bells in the tower, one of them being dated as re-cast in 1468, and bearing an inscription that it had been named then, as formerly, "Meg Duncan." The Established church congregation worship in the choir, which is divided from the nave by an ornamented party wall. In the vestry are to be seen some interesting relics of the church; and in the south end of the transept (called St. Catherine's aisle) the Scotch nobles are said to have attempted, by means of a spectral apparition, to terrify James IV. from persisting in his invasion of England. Among the ancient dwellings a particular house used to be pointed out to strangers as the place from whence Hamilton of Bothwellhaugh shot the Regent Murray. A bronze tablet, with the effigy of the regent, has been inserted in the wall of the county-court room to denote the spot where the house stood.

On the north side of the railway, a little to the west of the station, there stood an old house which formed part of a preceptory of the Knight Templars of Torphichen, and was used in the reign of James VI. as the Scottish mint. It was pulled down in 1886. The ancient Prætorium, or Town House, an elegant structure, erected in 1668, was partially destroyed by fire in 1847, but was immediately repaired. It contains a council chamber and sheriff court room, and a large hall, tastefully decorated, for public meetings. To the north of this stands the County Hall, which is handsome and convenient, and contains full length portraits of the late General John, fourth Earl of Hopetoun, of his brother, Sir Alexander Hope, both distinguished officers, and of the late Earl of Rosebery. On December 31st, 1887, the foundation stone was laid, with masonic honours, of a new town hall by Peter M'Lagan, Esq., M.P., P.G.M. It is situated in High street (opposite the Commercial Bank of Scotland), and when completed, will have a frontage of 56 feet, with a depth of ground from front to back of about 170 feet, and will contain, independent of offices, ante-rooms, cloak rooms, &c., and a hall capable of accommodating about 800 persons. The style of architecture is Scottish baronial, with traces of French Gothic detail, from designs by Mr. J. Russell Walker, of Edinburgh. The total cost is estimated at about £4,000. Linlithgow is one of the oldest royal burghs in Scotland. The Town Council is fifteen in number, and the magistrates elected from the Council are a provost and three bailies. The burgh unites with Lanark, Hamilton, Airdrie and Falkirk in sending one member to Parliament, the present one being W. P. Sinclair, Esq.

The county a few years ago erected a spacious court house, on the south side of the street, a little to the west of the Cross Well. The building contains offices for the sheriff, sheriff's clerk, procurator fiscal, and chief constable; besides a spacious court room, small court room, witness and jury rooms, and a hall for the procurators of court. A court is held every Wednesday for criminal cases, and on Friday for civil and small debt cases. Immediately opposite to the Town House is a fountain, completed on the 4th of June, 1807, in imitation of the ancient Cross Well. It is of hexagonal form ascended by steps, the water descending from the top of the fountain, which is surmounted by a unicorn holding a shield. The stream falls into a basin, from whence it is spouted into a larger one through the mouths of six grotesque figures, whence it again issues through the jaws of other heads into a still more capacious receptacle, which is surrounded by statues in male and female ancient costumes; here all the streams are concentrated, and find egress in a copious gush, from which the inhabitants are supplied with water. This work is said to have been all hewn by a one-handed mason, and to be a very poor imitation of the original structure. This architectural curiosity is surrounded by iron palisades of light and elegant workmanship. Several other fountains of similar formation are to be seen in the town. The Combination Poor House at St. Magdalene's on rising ground, about a quarter of a mile from the town, was erected in 1854, and is a neat and commodious building, including several lunatic wards. The cost of the erection was £9,000, defrayed by the following parishes in proportion according to the number of shares which each has in the establishment. Linlithgow is the largest contributor, and others in the following order: Borrowstounness, Bathgate, Whitburn, Carriden, Kirkliston, Muiravonside, and Abercorn. Paper-making, tanning, currying, and shoemaking may be taken as the staples of the trade. In the tanning and currying branches are several large establishments, the principal of which belongs to Messrs. T. Nimmo & Co. There are also close to the town a distillery, soap works, and two paper mills, belonging respectively to Messrs. Thomas Chalmers & Sons and Messrs J. Lovel & Son. The Union canal passes close by the town, an extensive basin of excellent masonry affording commodious accommodation to vessels trading on it; and a beautiful aqueduct, unsurpassed in the United Kingdom, conducts its water on twelve arches over the river Avon and a deep and extensive valley. The railway before mentioned passes along the south side of the main street. Near to the bridge, about a mile to the west, the line is carried over the Avon by means of a viaduct of 19 arches of substantial masonry.

The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, two United Presbyterian churches, one for Independents and one for Roman Catholics. There are two Board schools and an endowed school. A weekly market for grain is held on Friday, and there are fairs on the Friday after the second Tuesday in January, February 25th, the third Friday in April, the second Tuesday in June, August 2nd, and the first Friday in November. In 1871 Linlithgow contained a population of 3,690, and in 1881, 3,913.

MUIRAVONSIDE is a parish in the county of Stirling, about two miles from Linlithgow, its post town, and about seven miles from Falkirk. It is situate on the left bank of the Avon, which river is here rendered of great service in propelling the works of a number of mills on its banks. The parish, which is six miles in length by two in breadth, is bounded by the parishes of Bo'ness, Linlithgow, Torphichen, Polmont and Slamannan. The land is nearly all arable and enclosed, and beneath the surface there is an abundance of coal, lime and iron. The latter is manufactured by Messrs. Russell & Son, of Falkirk, near to which, at Causewayend, are the works of the Linlithgow Foundry Company, ironfounders. In the parish are an Established church and three public schools. MADDISTON is a village in this parish. The parish of Muiravonside covers an area of 7,963 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 2,713.

WINCHBURGH is a small village, with a station on the North British line, in the parish of Kirkliston, 2½ miles from the latter, and 5½ from Linlithgow. There is a public school close to the station.

QUEENSFERRY, WITH DALMENY.

QUEENSFERRY, or, as it is sometimes called, "SOUTH QUEENSFERRY (in contradistinction to North Queensferry, a harbour of Fifeshire), is a royal burgh and parish, the latter being confined within the limits of the former. It is 9 miles W. from Edinburgh, the same distance from E. Bo'ness, and 6 miles S.E. from Ratho, and is a station on the Edinburgh and Glasgow section of the North British Railway, situated between the shore of the Firth of Forth and the ridge that rises from the coast. There is an excellent and safe harbour here, which can be entered at any time according to the tide. Queensferry is a place of considerable antiquity, having received its name from the Queen of Malcolm Canmore (Margaret), who usually made choice of the ferry at this place for the passage of the Firth. Under her auspices the town increased in size, population, and commerce, but in the present day it is not conspicuous for either; it has no foreign trade, and through the winter it is chiefly supported by fishing. Some little consequence belongs to it from the ferry at Newhalls (a little to the eastward of the town) over the Forth. There is another pier a short distance to the westward, for the convenience of boats when they cannot make the former point; they are both handsome slips or piers, and run a considerable distance into the water. At this place the firth is contracted to a gut of two miles in width; and in the middle of the strait lies a small rocky island called INCHGARVIE. About half a mile to the westward is Port Edgar, so named from Prince Edgar having landed there. From this place George IV. when on a visit to Scotland, embarked on his return to England. As a royal burgh Queensferry is governed by a provost, two bailies, and a town council. The burgh unites with Stirling, Culross, Inverkeithing, and Dunfermline in returning one member to parliament, the present representative being the Right Hon. Henry Campbell-Bannerman. The Right. the Earl of Rosebery gave a piece of ground for a bleach green to the inhabitants, and also conveyed water into the town for their use, but the supply is now obtained from Mid-Calder. The magistrates and council, to evince their gratitude for these favours, raised a tablet, with an appropriate inscription over the fount. A handsome clock has been erected in the centre of the village, by public subscription, at a cost of over £200, in commemoration of her Majesty's jubilee. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, one for the Presbyterians, a Roman Catholic chapel, and a Workmen's Institute, in which religious services are held. A fair is held on the second Friday in August. The population of Queensferry, including Dalmeny, was in 1881, 1,966.

The Forth Bridge, which has been in course of construction for some time, has during the past three years made progress of a most substantial kind, and when complete it will be one of the greatest triumphs yet achieved by engineering science. The undertaking is being promoted by four railway companies with the object of providing a safe and speedy through-route to and from the North. The bridge will have a total length from end to end of 2,700 yards, the portion between high-water mark on the two sides of the Firth being 1,900 yards. Beginning at the Queensferry side, the bridge is carried out 1,780 feet on a series of nine piers of solid masonry, faced with blocks of Aberdeen grey granite. Each of these piers is 130 feet above high-water mark, and the span between them is 160 feet. The tenth pier from the shore is what is called the cantilever tower, the basement or cut-water of which is 103 feet in length and 52 feet thick, and upon it rests not only the end of the girders but the end of the shoreward arm of the south cantilever. The carrying of the railway over the Forth, the free navigation of the channel for the largest ships having to be conserved, is to be accomplished by the cantilever principle, which means that from three sets of granite piers arranged in groups of four columns each—the centre set at Inchgarvie, and the others about 1,800 feet on each side—a huge superstructure of steel will be reared supporting gigantic bracket-like arms, two of which, with a separate girder in the centre, will form an apparent arch with a span of 1,700 feet, and with a height above high water level of 150 feet. There will be two such spans in the bridge, and two half spans of 680 feet each, one thrown shoreward to the cantilever tower on the South Queensferry side, whilst the other will rest upon a corresponding tower on the opposite shore. Foundations for the piers were obtained by sinking enormous iron and steel caissons, 70 feet in diameter, to the solid rock. The material used in the building of the bridge is the strongest known, being granite for the foundation and steel for the superstructure. The number of men employed on the works at the present time is about 3,000. The space at our disposal will not admit of a more detailed description of this gigantic undertaking, and the few facts here given are extracted from an able article which appeared in the Scotsman newspaper.

DALMENY is a parish and small village, in the north-east of Linlithgowshire; the parish consists of a main body and a detached district; the main body surrounds Queensferry, and contains some of that town's outskirts on the east and west. Its length from east to west is 5½ miles, and its breadth 3½ miles. Nearly the whole of the parish is well cultivated and enclosed, and contains several mansions, amongst which are Lord Rosebery's, Craigie Hall, Dundas Castle, &c. The village, which is about a mile from Queensferry, contains the parish church and a public school; the former is of great antiquity, built in the mixed Greek and Gothic style of architecture. The small hamlet of CRAIGIE is in the parish, which has an area of 5,991 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 1,660 persons.

NEWTON is a small village in the parish of Abercorn, postal district of Winchburg, situated about 3 miles from Queensferry. The inhabitants are principally engaged in agriculture.

UPHALL, WITH BROXBURN,

ECCLESMACHAN, DECHMONT, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

UPHALL is a parish and village, the latter situated on the main road between Glasgow and Edinburgh, about 5½ miles E. from Bathgate, and 11 W. from Edinburgh. The extreme length of the parish is 4 miles, with a breadth of 3; and it is bounded by Kirkliston on the north-east and east, by Mid-Calder on the south, Livingstone on the west, and Linlithgow and Ecclesmachan on the north. It is intersected from west to east by the road from Glasgow to Edinburgh, and is watered by a rivulet called Broxburn, on which, and the public road, stands the village of that name. Shale, which is now so largely used in the manufacture of paraffin oil, of which there are three extensive works in the locality, is found in abundance in the neighbourhood, and is said to be of a very rich quality; bone manures are also manufactured in the parish. The district abounds in coal, sandstone, limestone and ironstone. The parish is chiefly of an upland character, but it is under the best system of agriculture and enclosure. In the village of Uphall there are an Established church and a Board School. In the chancel of the church are deposited the remains of the Hon. Henry Erskine, and also those of the late Lord Chancellor Erskine. There is a station on the North British Railway, about a mile from the village. The parish of Uphall comprises 4,541 acres, and had in 1881 a population of 4,812.

BROXBURN, the most populous village in the parish of Uphall, owes its prosperity and growth to the very extensive works of the Broxburn Oil Company, Limited, which are situated in the village, and furnish employment to the greater part of the inhabitants. It is 1 mile E. from the village of Uphall, 10 W. from Edinburgh, and 7 S.E. from Linlithgow. The western extremity of the village is crossed by the Union Canal from Edinburgh. The places of worship are Established, Free, and United Presbyterian churches, and a Roman Catholic chapel. There is also a Board school, and one for Roman Catholics; and a branch of the British Linen Company Bank is established here. Altogether Broxburn is in a prosperous condition. During the past few years the population has very much increased, and at the present time it is estimated to be about 5,000 persons. Drumshoreland station on the North British Railway is about a mile from the village.

The small parish of ECCLESMACHAN lies south of Abercorn and east of Linlithgow, about 5 miles S.E. from the latter town, and a mile and a half N. from Uphall; it is 4 miles in length and 1 in breadth, and is watered by a tributary of the Almond. Near the church is a weak sulphurous spring, called the Bullion Well. There are a church of the Establishment and a public school in the parish, which is a flat corn country, altogether under cultivation, and based on freestone. Acreage of the parish, 2,647; population in 1881, 278.

DECHMONT is a small village in the parish of Livingstone, and about a mile and a quarter W. from Uphall, its post town; situate on the road from Edinburgh to Glasgow.

WHITBURN,

FAULDHOUSE, CROFTHEAD, LONGRIDGE, BLACKBURN, AND LIVINGSTONE.

WHITBURN, or WHITEBURN, is a parish and village, the latter 21 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 10 S. from Linlithgow, and 4 S.W. from Bathgate; situated on the south road from Edinburgh to Glasgow, and on the Bathgate and Morningside Branch railway, on which line the company have a station at EAST WHITBURN, about a mile distant. It is a regularly built place, and is supported by the coal and iron mines with which the parish abounds, and a little weaving of cotton goods for the Glasgow houses. It contains a public coffee-house and reading-room, the gift of Lady Baillie, and a handsome school-house, the latter built by the trustees of the late Mr. Wilson, who bequeathed a considerable part of his property for the laudable purpose of erecting and supporting charity schools in the district. Within the parish are the villages and hamlets of EAST WHITBURN, LONGRIDGE, CROFTHEAD, GREENBURN, FAULDHOUSE, DRYBRIDGE, and BENHAR. The places of worship are the Established church and a Free church. The parish is watered by the Almond, the Breich, and two small rivulets. There is much moss and pasture land in the upper portion; in the lower division, on the contrary, the surface is arable, and admirably planted and enclosed. Acreage of the parish, 9,775; population in 1881, 6,326, of which the village numbered 1,290.

BLACKBURN is a small village in the parish, of and about four miles W. from Livingstone, three S. from Bathgate, and two E. from Whitburn, seated on the bank of the Almond. Adjacent to the village are lock stone quarries. The stone is used in the construction of ovens, being capable of bearing any amount of heat, but is useless for building purposes. There is also a works for the manufacture of millboard. There is a Board school in the village and a chapel of ease. Population in 1881, 790.

FAULDHOUSE is a village about 3½ miles S.W. from and in the parish of Whitburn. It is a quoad sacra parish, a post town, and station on the main line of the Caledonian railway between Glasgow and Edinburgh. It contains a population of about 3,000, the greater portion of which find employment in the coal and ironstone mines which abound in the neighbourhood, as well as in the oil works of the West Lothian Oil Company, Limited, which are in the immediate district. The places of worship are an Established church (quoad sacra), a Free church, and one for Roman Catholics. There is a station at Crofthead on the Morningside section of the North British railway, which passes close to the village.

LIVINGSTONE is a parish and village—the former stretching from 5 to 6 miles along the north bank of the Breich water, which separates the county from Edinburghshire, and has a breadth of from 3 to 4 miles. The village, which is not large, is 6 miles E. from Whitburn and 4 E. from Blackburn, situated on the banks of the Almond water, and on one of the roads from Edinburgh to Glasgow. The parish church is situated at the west end of the village, and the other place of worship is a Free church, erected in 1858, with a manse. There is also in the village a Board school, and in the parish are the paraffin oil works of the West Lothian Oil Company, Limited, and the Bathgate Oil Company, Limited. The railway station is a mile and a half from the village. Acreage of the parish, 5,362; population in 1881, 1,484.

LONGRIDGE is a small village about 2 miles S. from Whitburn. There are a United Presbyterian church and a Board school in the village.

NAIRNSHIRE.

THIS is a small maritime county in the north-eastern part of Scotland, once forming a portion of the ancient province of Moray. It is bounded on the north by the Moray Firth, on the east by the shire of Elgin (or Moray), and on the south and west by the county of Inverness. It extends from the coast, on the north, to the small lake of Lochindorb (situate at its extreme southern apex), on the south twenty miles; the breadth along the shore is twelve miles, and its sides vary from twelve to twenty-two miles asunder. The shire comprises two hundred and fifteen square miles; the number of acres in the shire is one hundred and thirty-seven thousand five hundred. In size this county ranks as the twenty-ninth, but as regards population it is, with one exception (Kinross), the smallest in Scotland.

SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The agricultural properties of Nairnshire assimilate so closely with those of the county of Elgin, that but brief notice of its wealth and capabilities in this respect is here necessary. Exclusive of the hilly part of the district, it may be described as a narrow border of level ground, along the shore, from one to nearly six miles in breadth—and here for the most part it is arable; but as the county recedes farther from the coast, it becomes bleak and hilly; there are, however, no eminences of great altitude or note in the whole county. The farms are usually small, and most frequently unenclosed. Sheep and black cattle are reared in considerable numbers, and chiefly fed on the natural pasturage. The county is crossed in its southern or hilly part by the river Findhorn, which runs in a direction from south-west to north-east; parallel with this rapid stream, about eight or nine miles to the west, courses the river Nairn, which also runs into the Moray Firth. Besides the rivers there are several small brooks, the banks of which are covered with woods and plantations; and there are some elegant seats scattered over the county. The shire is entirely devoid of manufactures, but the fisheries—white, herring and salmon—are tolerably productive.

RAILWAY.—The only railway which passes through this county is the Highland Railway, on which line Nairn is a station.

Small as this shire is, it possesses a distinct political and judicial establishment. It comprises three complete parochial divisions with seven parts of parishes, and contains one royal burgh, NAIRN, which is the only town. This burgh, in conjunction with Inverness, Fortrose and Forres, sends one member to Parliament; and the county unites with Elginshire in returning another representative; the present member for the joint counties being Charles H. Anderson, Esq., Q.C. The parliamentary constituency in 1888-9 numbered 792. According to the census returns for 1871, Nairnshire contained a population of 4,786 males, and 5,439 females; total, 10,225; in 1881 the figures were: Males, 4,975, females, 5,476; total, 10,451, showing an increase in ten years of 226.

NAIRN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ARDCLACH AND AULDEARN, AND THE VILLAGE OF CAWDOR.

NAIRN is a royal burgh of considerable antiquity, having been regalized by William the Lion. It is supposed that the town derives its name from the river Nearn, in Gaelic meaning alders—the river, or water, being understood. The original charter of the burgh is not extant. It was granted by Alexander I. in the year 1100, and was renewed by King James VI.—the gentle King Jamie It is stated of this monarch that he boasted of having a town in Scotland, the burgh of Nairn, which was so long that the inhabitants of the one end could not understand the language spoken at the other end. There was truth in this so far, at least, that till this century the border of the Highlands seemed to intersect the town about Rose street, and the Highlanders naturally clung together and loved to congregate at that end of the town. It is distant by rail from Edinburgh, 185 miles N.N.W.; from Aberdeen, 93¼ N.W.; from Perth, by the Inverness and Perth Junction Railway, 128¾ N.; from Forres, 9½ S.W.; and from Inverness, 15¼ N. There is a harbour here with breakwater and pier. Approaching the town from the west is seen the Nairn Hospital, a handsome building erected by subscription in 1846. Near the centre of High street is a spacious structure erected about 1818, containing a town and county court room. For a seaport town Nairn enjoys certain advantages, obtained from a fertile country yielding various articles proper for exportation. The exports consist of timber, corn, potatoes, eggs, smoked haddocks, herrings and freestone. The imports are groceries, hardware, linn, manures and coal. Four branch banking establishments are settled here, and also a savings bank. The white fishery is carried on successfully, and salmon fishing is also prosecuted. About four miles distant is the celebrated Royal Brackla Distillery, a very extensive establishment. The Highland Railway facilitates intercourse with the surrounding country, and the transit of goods and produce. The freestone quarries in the neighbourhood give employment to a number of men. The burgh unites with Inverness, Fortrose and Forres in returning one member to Parliament. The present member is Robert B. Finlay, Esq., Q.C., of Newton. A sheriff's court and a small debt court are held weekly. Nairn has been considerably improved of late years, being much resorted to in summer; its beach is inviting, and in the neighbourhood is some fine scenery and many agreeable residences. Some years ago new baths were erected by a public company, at a cost of about £15,000, the floors of which are formed of the solid rock, with a graduated depth of water. The bathing facilities in Nairn altogether are unrivalled by any town in Scotland, and the special characteristics of the place are those of a fashionable watering resort. A Public Hall has also been erected at a cost of about £12,000, which will accommodate 800 persons. It is situated in the High street, and is much used for public entertainments.

The places of worship are the Parish, Free, and United Presbyterian churches, and a chapel each for English and Scotch Episcopalians, Independents and Roman Catholics. One of the finest buildings in the town is the New Free church, which was opened for public worship on 1st January, 1882. It is situated opposite the Strath Monument, and is exposed on three sides, its elevations being of a very striking character. It is built in the early French style, and the modified Gothic is very effectually carried out both on the exterior and interior. A very handsome spire surmounts the building, a clock and bell being placed in the lower base of the tower. It is seated for 1,200 persons. There is an excellent museum, containing a valuable cabinet of minerals. At the western extremity of the town, adjoining what was formerly the parish school, a neat monument was erected some years since to Mr. John Strath, who was forty years schoolmaster. Fairs: Cattle, horse and general markets are held here once a month, on the Saturday following Muir of Ord market. Corn markets on Thursday weekly. Feeing markets, Thursdays preceding 26th May and 22nd November. The area of the parish is 8,827 statute acres, and its population was, in 1871, 4,869, and in 1881, 5,368; of this number 4,161 were returned for the town.

ARDCLACH is a Highland parish, in the south-east of the county, and is in general mountainous, covered with heath, and abounding in tracts of bleak and barren moss. It contains no village worthy of the name, and till within the last few years consisted of small crofters, with their plots of land, reclaimed from the surrounding wilds; but of late great improvements in agriculture have taken place, every year increasing the arable acreage of this parish. The river Findhorn traverses the parish, and the scenery along its banks is of the most varied and interesting description. There is a considerable quantity of timber along the banks of the river. The parish church, which is nine miles S.E. from Nairn, and a Free church are the places of worship. Acreage, 10,317. Population in 1881, 1,117.

AULDEARN, anciently called Erin, is a parish and village; the latter, a burgh of barony, is situated 2½ miles S.E. from Nairn. In the immediate neighbourhood of the village is the scene of a victory gained by the Marquis of Montrose over the forces of the Covenanters. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a United Presbyterian church at Moyness are the places of worship. The parish comprises an area of 14,085 statute acres, and in 1881 possessed a population numbering 1,292.

About 5 miles S.W. from Nairn is the interesting and picturesque village of CAWDOR, in the parish of the same name, where, upon the banks of the burn of its name, is an excellent inn, frequented by tourists and families, who visit this spot to contemplate the charming scenery around, and the towers of the ancient castle—the seat of the Thanes of Cawdor. The castle is occupied in the shooting season by the Earl of Cawdor. The stranger is granted access to this interesting structure (on applying at the inn for tickets of admission), where are vaulted chambers, spiral staircases, and tapestried rooms. From the summit of the castle is commanded one of the most extensive and lovely views in the county; and many parties of the gay and the fashionable appreciate by their presence in the summer and autumn the various beauties of the favoured locality. The parish of Cawdor, a portion of which is in the adjoining county of Inverness, contains an area of 29,366 statute acres, and in 1881 its population numbered 1,070.

THE

ORKNEY & SHETLAND ISLES.

THE ORKNEY ISLES.

KNOWN to the ancients by the name of Orcades, are situated in the Northern Sea, separated from Caithness-shire, in Scotland, by the Pentland Firth, and lying between the parallels of 58 deg. 44 min. and 59 deg. 25 min. north latitude, and 28 deg. 30 min. west longitude; from the coast of Scotland they are distant four leagues, and from the Shetland Isles about fifteen. The form of the islands is extremly irregular; and from these circumstances the dimensions of some of them are ascertained with difficulty. They are separated from one another by portions of water denominated "sounds," "firths," or "ferries," some of which are only a mile broad, whilst others are more than five. Though thus closely connected, the whole of them are of considerable extent, for from the south-west to the north-east the distance is not less than seventy miles, and they are upwards of forty in another direction.

NAME, EARLY HISTORY, &c.—The earliest inhabitants appear to have been Celtic, who, at an unknown period before the Christian era, established themselves in Scotland. Diodorus Siculus mentions Cape Orkas as one of the extremities of Britain; and the Orcades are first named in the second century by Pomponius Mela, who states their number at thirty; Pliny augments them to forty, but Ptolemy makes them only thirty. Tacitus asserts that the Orcades were discovered and subdued by Agricola, which seems to be corroborated by recent discoveries in the Orkneys of Roman coins belonging to the first century. The origin of the name is believed to be Celtic, and is probably derived from Orkin, a large marine animal—a term that has been applied to both whales and seals. Orkney therefore appears to mean "the land of whales," or of "seals." The Orcades seem to have been esteemed of some importance in the time of Constantine, as they are especially mentioned, with Gaul and Britain, as the patrimony of his youngest son. Little is known of the Orcades from that time until the convulsions in Norway, which ended in the elevation of Harold, "the Fair-Haired," to the undivided sovereignity of that country. About the middle of the ninth century Kenneth Macalpin obtained possession of the islands, and they continued with the Scottish throne until the end of the eleventh century when they were assigned by King Donald Bain to the King of Norway, to whom they were subject until the middle of the thirteenth century, when they were again transferred by Magnus, King of Norway, to Alexander, King of Scotland. But, although the islands were thus ceded, the Norwegians still asserted their right to them until the year 1468, when James III. of Scotland married Margaret, daughter of the King of Denmark, with whom they again passed, in lieu of her dowry, to the Crown of Scotland; and upon the birth of her son, James IV., they were finally ceded, which cession was confirmed when James IV. of Scotland married Ann, daughter of the King of Denmark. From the middle of the sixteenth to the beginning of the seventeenth century the islands were possessed successively by Earls Robert and Patrick Stewart—Robert being a natural son of James V. and half-brother to Queen Mary. Subsequent to this period the islands passed into the possession of the English Crown, and were bestowed by Charles I., and afterwards by Charles II., on the Morton family; in 1776 Lord Morton sold them to Sir Lawrence Dundas, and they have since remained in the family of his descendants. Having been so long and so repeatedly in the possession of the Norwegians, many names of persons, as well as of places, are derived from the Scandinavian language. It will be comprehended that the Orcadians bear no resemblance whatever to the Celtic Highlanders in language, dress, appearance, or customs. The inhabitants may be divided into three classes; the first consists of the gentry, or proprietors of land with such as have gained a competent fortune by means of industry; the second is formed of those who are denominated tradesmen and shopkeepers; and the third comprises fishermen, and the others for the most part employed in the cultivation of the soil, and either farmers with servants or what are termed cottagers. Orkney has given birth to some individuals who have attained to eminence in science, literature, and the arts. Of these we may mention Malcolm Laing, author of a well-known "History of Scotland;" Mrs. Brunton, authoress of "Self-Control;" Samuel Laing, author of a "Tour in Norway;" his son, Samuel Laing, late Finance Minister of India; the late Dr. Baikie, the African traveller; Dr. Rae, the Arctic traveller; Thomas Stewart Traill, an eminent professor of medical jurisprudence in the University of Edinburgh; and Murdoch M'Kenzie, author of a "Survey of the Orkney and Lewis Islands." The grandfather of Washington Irving, the celebrated American writer, was born in the island of Shapinshay, and the eminent engraver of the last century, Sir Robert Strang, was born in Kirkwall.

SOIL, PRODUCE, CLIMATE, &c.—Compared with the sterile wilds in some of the sister islands to the north, or even with the lofty hills and bleak marshy plains to the south, these islands gain so much that their appearance is favourable and inviting; to the eye their surface presents a rich and pleasing variety. It is conjectured by some (and there are circumstances which strongly tend to corroborate this) that these islands were, at some distant period, part of the mainland of Scotland. The hills composing the ridge that skirts the Western Ocean, as well as those that intersect the mainland, and occupy some of the other islands, are seldom single and detached, but for the most part formed into ridges of some extent, with small intervening valleys; and their tops, instead of rising high into a conical form, are generally either flat or rounded. Some few of them are almost entirely covered with verdure; the bottoms of many consist of cornfields, interspersed with patches of rich old grass, affording excellent feeding for cattle; the soil is sandy or clay loam. There are spots on some of them delightfully romantic, where the attention is arrested and the ear pleased by the murmurs of the rills, and the eye feasted on flowers that shed their fragrance around. But what is of much more consequence, Providence, ever bountiful in adding to the comforts of man, has, with no sparing hand, spread peat moss over a considerable portion of these islands. The ancient rude modes of cultivation are now abandoned, and the implements of husbandry have been materially improved. But much of the land under tillage is not regularly fenced, nor divided into separate fields. The spirit of improvement is now, however, generally diffused throughout the islands, and regular enclosures are becoming more frequent. The crops principally cultivated are oats, bere, barley, potatoes and turnips. Wheat has also been grown, but only with moderate success. Great numbers of cattle and sheep are raised, for the pasture of which this county is peculiarly well suited. The herring fishery is considerable; the principal "stations" are Papa-Stronsay, Deersound, Holm, Burray and South Ronaldshay. The markets are Ireland, Scotland, and England, a few only being sent abroad from Orkney, except the produce of the early fishery, which is carried on in the neighbourhood of Stromness, and from that place the herrings are despatched direct to Hamburg. The cod and ling fisheries are also prosecuted by various descriptions of craft from almost all the islands. In the curing of the fish many persons are engaged. Lobster catching, though not as productive as formerly, is still pursued with fair success, as is also the oyster dredging, which together give employment to many hands. The manufacture of kelp was at one time the staple of Orkney, but in consequence of the reduction of the duty on barilla, this trade suddenly collapsed, but latterly has shown signs of reviving, as it is now used in the making of iodine and other chemical substances. The distillation of whisky has long been established, there being two distilleries, one near Kirkwall and another at Stromness. Throughout the whole of the islands rain falls in considerable quantity, especially on the western coasts; and it is supposed that the annual amount showered upon these islands averages 36.95 inches. Snows are neither so frequent nor so heavy, but they come with comparative violence, and generally from the north-west and south-east; but though what falls in the course of the year may not be much short of the quantity in other northern latitudes, it continues only a few days at a time on the surface of the earth. A peculiarity of the climate with respect to the season of snow and hail merits some attention. Some part of the month of June, which in Britain is well known to be of a pleasant and genial warmth, is here not only colder than the preceding months, but also as much so as any month of winter; for two weeks, and even sometimes more, about the middle of June, the wind blows from the north, strong and piercing, accompanied with snow and hail showers.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—According to a survey taken by Dr. Murdo Mackenzie in 1750, the whole of the number of the islands under the denomination of the Orkneys amounted to sixty-seven, of which the following twenty-nine only are inhabited:—Mainland (or Pomona), Græmsay, Hoy, Waas, Raasay, Faray, Cavay, Flotay, South Ronaldshay, Swaney, Pentland Skerry, Burray, Lambholm, Copinsay, Shapinshay, Stronsay, Papa-Stronsay, Edey, Fairey, Sandey, North Ronaldshay, Westray, Papa-Westray, Egilsay, Rousay, Weir, Eunallow, Gairsay, and Damsay; the remaining thirty-eight, which in the primitive language of the country are termed "holms," are much inferior in size, and solely appropriated to pasturage. The Orkneys comprise twenty-six parishes; the only two towns are Kirkwall, which is the capital and a royal burgh, and Stromness, a burgh of barony. The isles of Orkney and Shetland form one sheriffdom or stewartry, under a sheriff depute, whose authority extends over all; but he has a substitute resident in Orkney, and another in Shetland, by whom the duties are principally performed. Combined they form one county, under the title of the County of Orkney and Shetland, which returns one member to the Imperial Parliament. Kirkwall, the capital of the Orkneys, is a representative burgh, joining with Wick, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain, and Cromarty in sending another member. The county is represented by Leonard Lyell, Esq.; and the burghs by J. Macdonald Cameron, Esq. The parliamentary constituency of the county in 1888-89 is 3,788. The Lord-Lieutenant is the Hon. John Charles Dundas, of Papdale. The aggregate area of the Orkney Isles is 610 square miles, or 390,147 acres. The population in 1871 was 14,355 males, and 16,919 females; total, 31,274; the numbers returned in 1881 were: Males, 14,982; females, 17,062; total, 32,044; showing an increase in the ten years of 770. The valuation of the county (exclusive of the royal burgh) for 1888-89 is £68,547.

KIRKWALL,

WITH THE PARISHES OF BIRSAY, DEERNESS, EVIE, FIRTH, HARRAY, HOLM, ORPHIR, ST. ANDREWS AND ST. OLA, BURRAY, SOUTH RONALDSHAY, AND THE NORTH ISLES.

KIRKWALL, the capital of the Orkney Islands and of the united parishes of Kirkwall and St. Ola, is a town of great antiquity, a royal burgh, and the seat of a synod and Presbytery. It is 353 miles from Edinburgh by land and ferry, but considerably less by water; 58 N. from Wick, 54 N. by E. from Thurso, 41 N. from Huna Ferry (the most northerly part of Great Britain), and 14¾ E. from Stromness; situate about the centre of an island, called, by way of pre-eminence, Mainland, or Pomona, and on the south-east of the bay of Kirkwall. The town bears strong characteristics of antiquity; the principal street is exceedingly narrow, being in some places barely wide enough to afford passage for a cart; the houses are generally arranged with their gables towards the street, which gives the town a singular appearance. Many of these houses, both externally and internally, present striking features of old age—the doors and windows are small, the walls of great thickness, and the apartments narrow and gloomy. The modern dwellings, however, form an exception to this style, and many of them vie with the most commodious habitations of any other place of the same extent in Scotland. New municipal buildings have been erected, the foundation-stone having been laid by the late Earl of Mar and Kellie, on August 20th, 1884. They are three storeys in height, and are built in the Scottish baronial style of architecture, the principal entrance being emphasised by a fine semi-classic door-piece, surmounted by two statues of the ancient halberdiers of the burgh in full uniform. The accommodation on the ground floor comprises telegraph office, office of burgh surveyor and town clerk, and three other suites of offices. On the first floor, at the back, is the Town Hall, the front being occupied as town council chamber, immediately behind which, and between it and the Town Hall, is situated a room for the Commissioners of Supply.

The most conspicuous building in Kirkwall is the Cathedral of St. Magnus. It was founded by Ronald, Earl of Orkney, 1138, in honour of and dedicated to his uncle, St. Magnus, and though the work of different ages, and brought to completion under various superintendence, must be admitted to be an edifice not only grand and simple, but also surprisingly regular and uniform, and is a most imposing ornamental object of pride to these northern islands. A short distance from the cathedral is a large and handsome church belonging to the United Presbyterians, and near it is the Free church. There are also places of worship for the Episcopalians, Independents and Roman Catholics. The ancient church of St. Ola, which is believed to have existed prior to the foundation of that of St. Magnus, and was then the only religious establishment, stood near the shore of the road or bay of Kirkwall, and from its situation the town originally obtained the appellation of Kirkjiovauger, or the "Kirk on the bay," subsequently corrupted to Kirkwall. Opposite the cathedral, on the west side of the street, were the ruins of a fortress, called the "King's castle," which time and the havoc of war had nearly levelled. It was a place of considerable strength in 1581, when, or soon after, it was occupied by the Earl of Orkney, natural son of James V. The remains were cleared away during the latter part of 1865, and a new street formed, called Castle street, leading to Harbour street. To the south of the cathedral are the remains of the ancient palace of the Bishops of Orkney, in which King Haco of Norway died after his defeat at Largs; and almost adjoining to these are the ruins of the Earl's Palace, built by Earl Patrick Stewart, about the beginning of the seventeenth century.

Kirkwall was created a royal burgh, in the first instance, by James III., and its charter was renewed by James V; its government is confided to a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, a dean of guild, and eight councillors; it is a representative burgh, and unites with Tain, Wick, Dornoch, Dingwall and Cromarty, in returning one member to Parliament, the gentleman at present sitting being J. Macdonald Cameron, Esq. The quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesday in March, May, and August, and the last Tuesday in October; the sheriff and small debts court are open every Tuesday during the sitting of the Supreme Court, and oftener when necessary. The new County Buildings, situated mid-way between the ruins of the Earl's and Bishop's palaces, are of an elaborate description, and were erected in 1877, at a cost of about £5,000. The masonry is principally composed of the well-known freestone of the district, the architecture being a combination of the ancient and modern styles. They contain ample accommodation for the local courts, county officials, and committee rooms, &c., and are connected with the gaol.

The harbour of Kirkwall is safe and commodious; it has two excellent piers, a new one, a massive and substantial structure, having been erected in 1885, at a cost of about £20,000, which enables steamers and other vessels to come to the pier head at all times of the tide; the outer bay affords good anchorage. Altogether, the situation of the place is well adapted for the resort of shipping. Fishing and fish curing occupy many persons, and the trade in timber is of some consequence. There are four branch banking establishments, and four hotels. Kirkwall sustains several educational establishments, including an academy or grammar school, which are now under the control of the Burgh School Board. The Poor House, a neat erection, built from funds supplied out of the rates, at a cost of about £3,000, gives accommodation to the poor of the whole county. The Balfour Hospital was founded by John Balfour, Esq. of Trenabie, for the relief of the sick and as an asylum for a certain number of aged, infirm persons, who are attended gratuitously by the faculty of Kirkwall. The Kirkwall fair was at one time famed for the extent of its business and the number of merchants and others attending from various distant places, and it has been compared to the famous Leipsic fair on a smaller scale. It is held on the first Tuesday after the 11th of August, and continues during that week and the one succeeding; but the business is now comparatively trifling. There is also a horse and cattle market held on the first Monday in every month. The population of Kirkwall and St. Ola in 1881 numbered 4,777, of which number 3,923 belonged to the burgh of Kirkwall. Of the North Isles, Shapinshay contained 974 inhabitants; Rousay, Egilsbay and Weir, 1,118; Westray, 2,195; Papa Westray, 845; Stronsay, 1,299; Eday and Pharay, 802; Sanday, 2,075; and North Ronaldshay, 547. Of the parishes, Deerness numbered 860; St. Andrews, 898; Holm, 1,090; St. Ola, 854; Orphir, 1,012; Firth, 736; Harray, 745; Birsay, 1,581; and Evie and Rendall, 1,351; of the South Isles, Burray contained 693, and South Ronaldshay, 2,608.

STROMNESS,

WITH THE PARISHES OF STENNESS AND SANDWICK, AND THE ISLANDS OF HOY, GRÆMSAY, AND FLOTTA.

STROMNESS is a burgh of barony and seaport, 14¾ miles W. from Kirkwall, situated, as that town is, on the mainland (or Pomona Island) of the Orkneys, adjoining the sound of Hoy, opposite Græmsay Island. This place, which has risen within the last century from being a fishing hamlet, composed of a few scattered huts, to a populous town, owes its increase to its admirable harbour and convenient position, by which it is rendered a place of safe resort, in these stormy seas, to vessels trading with the north of the eastern or western hemispheres. Its harbour is a fine natural basin, extending from south to north more than a mile, and is sheltered from the Atlantic on the west by a high ridge of moorish ground, the southern extremity of which forms the north side of Hoy Sound; while its entrance is protected partly by the island of Græmsay, which lies midway in the sound, and partly by a ness or point of land which stretches from the westward. On the east side it is defended by two small islands or holms which extend along the back of it; and even beyond these, in a sort of outer harbour or roadstead, there is excellent anchorage for shipping. It was formerly no uncommon thing in the spring months to see in these havens upwards of fifty large vessels on their way to the whale fishery in Davis Straits and Greenland. They called here for the purpose of completing their complement of men, which was generally about twenty for each ship. In some years there were upwards of seven hundred men furnished from this port to Davis Straits, besides one hundred and fifty apprentices, but the numbers have for some years been gradually diminishing. Lobster fishing is carried on extensively and profitably. About five hundred men are engaged in the herring fishery, and employed by the Hudson Bay Company, who have a resident agent. In this harbour captains may be supplied with necessaries to prosecute their voyage; and for repairs of vessels most efficient and expeditious means are afforded by two patent slips. The machinery of the slips is of the most substantial description, and by it a ship of seven hundred tons can be taken into the yards. A very extensive warehouse is situated at the north end of the town; and there is an excellent pier, with eighteen feet of water at spring tides. Boat and ship building is carried on. Branches respectively of the National, the Commercial, and the Union Bank of Scotland are established here, and there are two hotels. The Orkney Natural History Society's Museum contains Hugh Miller's celebrated Asterolepis, and many other specimens of much interest, and has been further enriched by assortments from the collection of the late Dr. Baikie. Stromness is a very irregularly built town, the habitations having been erected without any regard to uniformity of arrangement, and generally as near the sea as possible; some are even within flood mark, and protected by bulwarks, quays, and jetties, which each individual appears to have constructed as suited his own convenience and taste. Stromness is an independent burgh of barony by a charter held from the Crown, granted in 1817, when the government was vested in two bailies and nine councillors. The market days are first Wednesday of each month. An annual fair, held on the second Tuesday in September, continues for two days. The streets are paved, and there are gas works in the town. The population of Stromness in 1881 was 2,408. The parish of Stenness contained 621 inhabitants; Sandwick, 1,198; Hoy and Græmsay, 603; and Walls and Flotta, 1,506.

THE SHETLAND ISLES,

OR ZETLAND ISLES, above one hundred in number, twenty-three of which only are inhabited, are a group of islands, islets, and rocks, situated in the Northern Ocean, about fifteen leagues north-east of the Orkneys, and forty-four west of Bergen, in Norway; lying between 50 degs. 48 mins. 30 secs., and 60 degs. 52 mins. north latitude, and between 1 deg. 52 secs. and 1 deg. 57 mins. west longitude from London. There are three principal islands in the group, namely, Mainland, Yell (on the north), and (still further north-east) Unst; on the east of Yell lies Fetlar, which is the largest of the inferior islands, the lochs of which are famous for trout, and several of the other islands abound with seal, otter, and wild fowl. The next island in point of size is Bressay; the smaller ones are Whalsay, Out Skerries, Samphray, Big Island, Mickle Roe, Papa Stour, House, Barray, Trondray, besides a great number of islets, holms, and skerries. The history of Shetland is so much involved in that of Orkney as to render an enlarged notice of its early history unnecessary. That the Romans visited the coasts of Shetland is highly probable, from the coins of that people which have been discovered—those of Galba, Vespasian, Trajan, and Ælius Cæsar; and the remains of a small Roman camp are to be traced on the island of Fetlar. There seems to be little doubt these islands were first inhabited by the Norwegians, the laws having been administered by "Udallers," who acted as a sort of petty princes. In the year 875, Harold Harfager, or "The Fair-haired," subdued these islands, and gave them to Count Sigurd, who was the first Earl of Orkney, from whom sprang the true Scandinavian dynasties of the Earls of Orkney and Shetland—the latter country being at first too insignificant to be included in the title, although it was included in the grant. On the cession of the Shetland Isles to the Scottish crown, the laws of the former were gradually encroached upon by the oppressive endeavours of the Scotch earls to introduce feudal subjection and seniorage in place of the ancient udal tenures. From 1468, when a marriage was concerted between the Scottish monarch, James III., and the Princess of Denmark (when Orkney and Shetland were pledged to the royal husband), to the time when the two countries passed to the English crown, in the persons of Charles I. and II., and afterwards to the Earl of Morton (who sold the estate to Sir Lawrence Dundas), nothing occurs relating to the possession of Shetland distinct from that which has been already noticed of Orkney.

SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The general aspect of the country is bleak and barren; and although there is but little to attract in the form of landscape in what may be called the interior of the islands—the whole of them being destitute of wood—their coast scenery presents views of a highly interesting character; and the summer tourist who may be content to leave behind for awhile the rich luxuriance of an English landscape and take a peep at Nature in her more wild and romantic guise, will find in the diversified appearance and picturesque grandeur of the coast of Shetland ample gratification. The want of roads has been much felt by the inhabitants of Shetland, but Government are obviating this inconvenience by constructing roads between the principal inhabited parts; and where this means of communication does not exist, boats are called into use on the numerous fine "voes" which penetrate far into the interior. In travelling by land, the small ponies, or "shelties" as they are called, pursue their way across the wastes without much difficulty. The cattle of Shetland are of a very diminutive breed. A cow is said to weigh from two to three hundred weight upon an average; an ox from three to four, but seldom exceeding five hundred weight. A great abundance of poultry is kept on almost every farm, and small swine are very numerous. The sheep are very small but produce wool of an excellent quality, which is knitted into shawls, veils, stockings, gloves and mitts. Little attention is paid to agriculture, and the system of cultivation adopted is poor, the principal crops grown being oats, potatoes and turnips, the latter introduced early in the present century. The fuel in general use is peat, the cutting and drying of which occupies diligent attention. The highest land in these islands is Roeness Hill, which attains an elevation of one thousand four hundred and forty-seven feet. The Hill of Foula is next in altitude, being about one thousand three hundred feet above the level of the sea. The chief support of the Shetlander is dependent on the white fishery—herring, cod and ling abounding on the coasts; besides which many men and boys are employed every season in the Davis Straits whale fishing. Persons are also engaged in angling for the small fry of the coal fish or gadus carbonarius—known in Shetland by the name of "sethe." These swarm in myriads within the numerous creeks and sounds of this northern archipelago. They first appear in May, scarcely more than an inch long. About August they become more abundant, measuring about eight inches in length, and in the early part of the following year they attain the ordinary size of the cod-fish. A profitable fishery then takes place in deep tide-ways, supplying the inhabitants with a portion of food and oil from the livers for light and other purposes.

The Shetland Isles form twelve parochial divisions, comprising two presbyteries and a synod. The only town in this portion of the northern group is Lerwick; besides it, there are only a few villages and hamlets on the shores. The islands now pay their proportion of the land tax, and in every other respect have become subject to British laws. They are represented in Parliament (as already noticed) in connection with the Orkneys, to which sheriffdom they belong. The acreage is estimated at 208,579, or 325 square miles. According to the census returns of 1871 the population numbered 13,103 males, and 18,505 females; total, 31,608. The figures returned in 1881 were: Males, 12,656, females, 17,049; total, 29,705; showing a decrease of 1,903.

LERWICK, SCALLOWAY, &c.

AND THE NORTH ISLES.

LERWICK, the principal town in Shetland, is (by steam), 272 miles from Edinburgh, 165 from Peterhead (Aberdeenshire), 126 from Wick, and 95 from Kirkwall, situate on the east coast of Mainland, or the largest island of the group. It bears the name of the bay upon whose margin it is built; and that, in its turn, derives its name from a long, narrow inlet on the opposite shore of the island of Bressay, called Lera-voe, and remarkable for its extensive deposit of clay and mud; a projecting point at the entrance to Lera-voe is called Lera-ness; and the whole bay, including the roadstead of Bressay sound, is named Lerwick, which signifies the "bay of clay," or "mud"—compounded of Icelandic leir, Danish leir (clay, mud), and Suio-Gothic wik, Danish vig, vig (an arm of the sea, an anchorage). The site of the town, comprising a lunated segment of the sea shore of nearly half a mile in length, and becoming gradually more elevated as it recedes from the coast line, presents the appearance of a perfect amphitheatre, and, when viewed from the opposite anchorage, the effect is singularly picturesque. The principal street extends through the whole length of the town, following the curvature of the sea shore, and numerous lanes and closes, constructed at right angles with it, lead to a spacious road on the eminence above the town. The houses are built of a species of grey sandstone, which abounds in the immediate vicinity, and which is both of considerable beauty and great durability, and in general they are far superior to those of the sister town of Kirkwall, in Orkney; but here, as in Kirkwall, the houses (with the exception of those very recently erected) seem to have dropped by accident into their respective localities, their owners apparently being indifferent whether fronts or backs, gables or corners, were planted towards the street; in several places, also, the buildings project so far into the main street that there is scarcely room for a carriage to pass. The more offensive of these obstructions are, however, being gradually removed. A new Town Hall has been erected at the cost of about £5,500, the foundation stone of which was laid by the Duke of Edinburgh, 24th January, 1882. It is built in the Gothic and Scottish baronial styles of architecture, with Orkney free-stone dressings. It was opened on the 12th of August, 1883. The architect was Mr. Alexander Ross, Inverness. In 1887, on the occasion of the Queen's jubilee, a handsome clock and a fine peal of eight bells, provided by public subscription and private donations, were placed in the building, at a cost of about £600. The other principal public buildings are the Town and County Buildings, Fort Charlotte, the parish and other churches, and Subscription Rooms. Fort Charlotte stands on a rocky eminence at the northern extremity of the town; its guns command the whole range of the anchorage, from the south to the north entrance of the harbour. It was originally built in the reign of Charles II., but having been dismantled and allowed to fall into a state of dilapidation, it was rebuilt in 1781, and received the name it now bears in honour of the consort of George III. It is at present used as a training establishment for the Royal Naval Reserve. The poorhouse, erected outside the town at a cost of £5,000, gives accommodation to the poor of the whole of the county. Adjacent is the hospital recently completed at an expenditure of £2,000.

The parish church stands above the town, towards its southern extremity; it is a substantial building, with a Doric front of hewn stone; but in consequence of the flatness of its roof, and the want of a spire, its external appearance is somewhat ponderous; internally, however, it is tastefully and commodiously fitted up. The Free church is a handsome modern building, neatly arranged There are several other places of worship, substantial and spacious structures, of which a list, with their ministers, is appended.

Lerwick is a burgh of barony, having its municipal government vested in three bailies and nine councillors, with a separate board of police, all of whom are elected by the burgesses. A sheriff small debt court is held every Wednesday, and a bailie court is held as occasion requires. The justices of the peace, the commissioners of supply, and the provincial synod of Shetland also hold their meetings in Lerwick. The trade of this town is much more extensive than the amount of population would indicate. There are shops on both sides of the principal street; and the mercantile business which is transacted in some of the establishments here would be considered important in many a city in the kingdom. A considerable portion of the produce of Shetland, consisting of fresh and salted fish, beef, oil, butter and hosiery, passes to market through the merchants of Lerwick; and, in like manner, by them are imported nearly all the groceries, spirits and manufactured goods used throughout the islands. The harbour of Lerwick (or Bressay sound, as it is frequently called) is one of the most spacious, secure and commodious havens in the British empire. It is bounded on the east by the island of Bressay, and on the west by Mainland, having an entrance from the south and another from the north. Its extent may be inferred from the fact that, on more than one occasion, a fleet of upwards of ninety sail of war ships has anchored in it. Branches of the Commercial, Union and North of Scotland Banks are established here. The population of Lerwick in 1881 was 4,581, and of the various parishes as follow:—Bressay, Burray and Quarff, 1,768; Delting, 1,654; Dunrossness, Sandwick, Cunningsburgh and Fair Isle, 4,126; Fetlar, 431; Foula, 267; Nesting and Lunnasting, 1,599; Northmavine, 2,279; Papa Stour, 253; Sandsting and Aithsting, 2,694; Tingwall, Whiteness and Weisdale, 2,348; Walls and Sandness, 1,727; Whalsay and Out Skerries, 1,027; Unst, 2,181; and Yell, 2,529.

SCALLOWAY is a seaport village in the parish of Tingwall, 8 miles from Lerwick, situated on the north side of a fine bay on the west side of Mainland. Anciently this was the capital of Shetland. Near the village are the ruins of Scalloway Castle, erected in 1600, by Patrick Stewart, Earl of Orkney and Shetland. The inhabitants chiefly subsist by the herring fishery, and for facilitating the pursuit of this branch, there is a large quay and extensive warehouse, cooperage, &c. In the spring of the year "haaf" fishing for cod and ling is also successfully resorted to. The men of Scalloway are of a very fearless character, and frequently put to sea in such boisterous and stormy weather as would deter the most experienced and intrepid seamen of other quarters. They are also a very industrious and perserverng race; some have feued ground, and have erected houses for themselves. The parish church stands 8 miles from the village, at the head of a fine fresh-water loch; and there is a neat chapel of ease in the village, erected by the late Rev. John Turnbull. On the west shore is a spring of very excellent water, the flow from which is uninfluenced by the seasons, being constant and abundant; it is covered by the sea at high water. Not far distant is "Gallows Hill," so called from its having formerly been the place of execution. The last who suffered on the spot are said to have been two unfortunate females, who fell a sacrifice to superstition in the seventeeth century for the alleged crime of witchcraft. The parish of Tingwall numbere l in 1831 2,385 inhabitants.

PEEBLES-SHIRE,

OR TWEEDDALE, a county in the southern part of Scotland, is bounded on the north and north-east by Edinburghshire, on the east and south-east by Selkirkshire, on the south by Dumfries-shire, and by the county of Lanark for almost the whole extent of its western border. In length, from its southern border to its extreme northern apex, it measures full thirty miles; from east to west, including the parts on the latter boundary that mingle with Selkirkshire, its breadth is upwards of twenty miles, whilst in other parts it varies from ten to fifteen miles. Its form is exceedingly irregular, and it comprehends an area of 356 square miles, or 227,869 acres. In size Peebles is the twenty-third, and in population the thirtieth of the counties of Scotland.

NAME AND EARLY HISTORY.—The shire derives its present title from the county town, and Tweeddale from being the district in which the Tweed has its source, and the vale through which it pursues its course to the east. The Gadenii tribe of Britons, who inhabited this secluded territory on the Tweed, have left innumerable traces of their residence, demonstrated in the names of places Druidic and warlike remains, and sepulchral tumuli. The Romans were the first people who broke in upon the British aborigines in the district. After the abdication of the Roman power, the Gadenii naturally associated with the kindred Britons of Strathclyde; and the descendants of those early settlers continued here throughout the Pictish period, and until the fortunes of the Scottish kings prevailed in 974. From the epoch of the migration of the Strathclyde Britons, in the ninth century, the Scoto-Irish intermingled with the remaining Britions on the upper Tweed. The next and last class of intruders on the district were the Anglo-Saxons, from Lothian, who ultimately prevailed, and finally established a settlement in the shire. One of the chiefs of this people, called Eadulph, settled in the vale of Edleston water, to which, with the village, he communicated his name; in this manner those of Saxon lineage founded the families of rank in Peebles-shire. At different times the county suffered in a small degree from the inroads of marauders from the English side of the borders, a circumstance which had the effect of keeping the people long in the exercise and possession of warlike weapons. At Philiphaugh, some of the heads of the best families fell, or were taken prisoners, fighting on the side of royalty but in the insurrection of 1679, in the West of Scotland, which was ended by the battle of Bothwell Bridge, there were not a dozen persons natives of Tweeddale. Since these stirring events neither the county nor its inhabitants have been in any way prominent in the scenes of history.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The county is an uninterrupted series of hill and mountain ranges, so close upon each other that there is scarcely to be found a plain of moderate dimensions in the district, and not one of any kind unless upon the margin of the Tweed or its tributaries. Notwithstanding the attempts made by several individuals to encourage new and better modes of agriculture, till within the last seventy years the management of arable farms was in a deplorably low condition; but within the last fifty years particularly, draining, ploughing, and planting have been carried on most effectually, and the general features of the country highly improved. The sides and summits of the hills are at the present time here and there clothed with exuberant plantations; and the great vale of the district, and its minor valleys, are now well cultivated, enclosed and divided; rich arable fields have taken the place of unproductive swamps, and are rapidly advancing up the sides of the hills. Barley and oats are the chief corn crops, but wheat is also grown on the richer low grounds. Beans, peas and potatoes are also cultivated, but not extensively, as are also turnips, the soil being admirably adapted for the growing of this root, upon which large numbers of sheep of the Cheviot and black-faced breeds are fed. The elevations for so small a county are very numerous, and some of them of considerable altitude. The following are among the most conspicuous in height above the level of the sea:—Hartfield, 2,916 feet; Broad Law, 2,850; Dollar Law, 2,840; Scrape, 2,560; Gunn Cleugh, 2,200; Dundroich, Pykestane, and Hell's Cleugh, each 2,100; Cardon, 2,000; Cairn Hill, 1,800; Broughton Heights, 1,183; and Meigle, 1,480. Little can be said of the minerals of the county. At the north-east extremity of the shire coal is found, but at too great a distance to be of advantage to the general population; the county is in the same predicament as to freestone, and the houses are nearly all built of blue whinstone. At Stobo there is a valuable quarry of blue slate; limestone and marl are plentiful, and ironstone is found in some parts of the district. Peebles-shire is almost devoid of manufactures, except at Peebles and Innerleithen, where there are several mills for the manufacture of tweeds and shawls. It is remarkable that there is so little manufacturing industry displayed, when it is considered what a superiority the district possesses in the purity and fall of its waters, which make it altogether a most advantageous site for the establishment of paper and spinning mills, as well as general manufactories.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAYS.—The principal river is the Tweed, distinguished as the fourth of Scottish streams. The upper sources of this beautiful water are found in the parish of Tweedsmuir, in this county. It is enriched by many tributaries, and after passing the ancient town of Berwick, falls into the German Ocean. The other rivers are the Lyne, the Leithen, and the Manow, all of which are subsidiary to the Tweed, and the Leggett, which runs into St. Mary's Loch, in Selkirkshire. In the rivers and small lakes there are abundance of salmon and trout, and a lake, called the West Water Loch, is noted for the quantity of eels with which it swarms. The railway from Peebles to Edinburgh is the North British, and the one from Symington to Peebles, the Caledonian. There is also a railway to Innerleithen, and a line from thence to Galashiels, and a railway to Linton, properly called West Linton, to distinguish it from East Linton, in Haddingtonshire.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—When the country began to be divided into sheriffdoms, about the twelfth century, Tweeddale was put under the jurisdiction of two sheriffs, one of whom was settled at Traquair, the other at Peebles. Peebles-shire, from its connection with the ancient kingdom of Strathclyde, became naturally a part of the diocese of Glasgow, in which it continued till the dissolution of Episcopacy. The shire now comprises fourteen parishes, and two parts of parishes; it contains one royal burgh—Peebles—but possesses no representative burgh; the county, in conjunction with that of Selkirk, however, returns one member to the Imperial Parliament, the present representative being Walter Thorburn, Esq. The Parliamentary constituency in 1888-89 is 2,688. The Lord-Lieutenant of the county is Colin J. Mackenzie, Esq., of Portmore. The population in 1871 numbered 12,330, comprising 5,955 males, and 6,375 females; in 1881 it contained 6,626 males, and 7,196 females; total, 13,822; increase, 1,492. The valuation of the county for 1888-89 (including the burgh of Peebles, but exclusive of railways, which is £19,631), is £118,635.

INNERLEITHEN, WALKERBURN, AND TRAQUAIR.

INNERLEITHEN, or Inverleithen, is a parish and village—the latter, respectable and pleasant, is 28 miles S. from Edinburgh, 16 N.W. from Selkirk, 12 W. from Galashiels, and 6 E. from Peebles, situated near the mouth of the Leithen, within a quarter of a mile of the left bank of the Tweed, and environed on the east and west by high and partly wooded hills. Upon the banks of the Leithen are several large woollen manufactories, the powerful machinery of which is propelled by the stream, and the works employ a considerable number of hands. Tweed and other woollen goods are made here in great perfection. There is also a silk mill employing upwards of a hundred hands. The celebrity and some of the prosperity of the village are derived from the number of visitors who resort hither to the salubrious mineral springs, which possess properties similar in effect to the waters of Harrogate and Bridge of Allan, and are found eminently beneficial in cases of scrofulous disorders, inflammation of the eye, and various diseases originating in impurity of blood. The springs are much frequented in the summer, particularly by families from the large cities, for whose accommodation there are a number of substantial houses, forming a neat small street along the public road, with a variety of houses behind, let as private furnished lodgings. A well-house was erected in 1826. There is a branch of the Bank of Scotland, and a savings bank here. The village is well lighted with gas. Additional celebrity has been imparted to this place by Sir Walter Scott, in his noval called "St. Ronan's Well," of which this spot is supposed to be the scene. The Traquair Arms Hotel, situated within five minutes' walk of free trout fishing, is the principal one here, where the tourist and the traveller will find every accommodation. About three miles west, situated on a knoll, may be seen the ruins of Horsbrugh Castle, one of the range of border peel towers, anciently possessed of much grandeur and strength. It is spoken of by Armstrong as being habitable in 1775. Between Innerleithen and Walkerburn are Purves Hill Terraces. They are planted with ash trees, but their contour may easily be made out; they vary from about 50 feet to about 120 feet in breadth, and the second in the ascent is over 900 feet in length; the depth between each terrace is about 14 feet. At one end of these terraces was situated Purves Hill Tower, but a few stones only remain to attest its site. Some fifty years ago an association was instituted styled the "St. Ronan's Border Club." It was composed of a great number of gentlemen connected with all parts of the country, under whose auspices was held an annual festival for the exhibition of Olympian and border games and gymnastic exercises. Though the club is extinct, the exhibition still takes place, the day of competition being usually in August. The places of worship are Established and Free churches—one for each, an United Presbyterian church, one for Independents, and a Roman Catholic chapel, a handsome edifice, built by benefactions left by the late Lady Louisa Stuart, of Traquair, the last of the direct line of that family. This parish, which embraces an area of 23,981 acres, contained in 1881 a population of 3,661.

WALKERBURN, a mile and a half distant, is a village in the above parish. It contains two large woollen mills, a public hall holding about 800 persons, an Established and a Congregational church, a Board school, and a sub-post office. The village is supplied with spring water from the neighbouring hills. About forty years ago the village consisted of two cots and a farm house. About this time the late Henry Ballantyne, Esq., may be said to have founded its manufacturing industry, he having secured the use of the Tweed as a motive power for the mills, from Captain Horsbrugh, and subsequently, in a few years, he and the late Robert Freer built their woollen factories. The latter gentleman went no further in the enterprise, but disposed of his interest in the matter to Messrs. James Dalziel & Co., the present proprietors. The two mills give employment to a number of hands. Population in 1881, 1,026.

TRAQUAIR is a parish on the south bank of the Tweed, and watered also by the river Quair; it lies opposite to Innerleithen, with which place a communication has been opened by means of a fine modern girder bridge thrown across the Tweed, and erected at a cost of about £3,500. The general appearance of the parish is mountainous and pastoral; in it are Gumscleugh and Minchmoor, lofty eminences lying on the old road to Selkirk, and over which Montrose retreated with his troops after his defeat at the battle of Philiphaugh. The old mansion-house of Traquair is delightfully situated on the banks of the Tweed, where that river and the Quair unite; and on the side of the hill overlooking the lawn is the "Bush aboon Traquair" (the subject of the celebrated ballad), pointed out by a few birch trees, the remains of a thicket or arbour, once the seat of pastoral love. Traquair House originally had a tower situated at the north-east corner, believed to have been erected before the year 900. Large additions were made to the tower by the first Earl of Traquair. The charterhary of the family contains many ancient and important family and historical documents, some of which are dated as far back as the 9th century, and bear the signature of Malcolm III. There is an Established church situated about the centre of the parish, and also a Roman Catholic chapel. Traquair parish, which embraces an area of 15,327 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 754.

PEEBLES,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF EDDLESTON, BROUGHTON, GLENHOLM AND KILBUCHO, DRUMMELZIER, KIRKURD, LYNE AND MEGGET, MANOR, SKIRLING, STOBO, TWEEDSMUIR, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PEEBLES is an ancient royal burgh, the capital of its county and parish, and the seat of a presbytery; 22 miles S. from Edinburgh, the same distance W. by N. from Selkirk, 54 N.N.E. from Dumfries, and 47 E. by S. from Glasgow. It is situate in the centre of the parish, on a beautiful and large plain, having the Tweed running along its southern side, and the Peebles (or Eddleston) water along its northern limit, surrounded by an amphitheatre of hills, and its vicinage is adorned by numerous thriving plantations and elegant mansions. Among the latter, Kingsmeadows, Kerfield, Venlaw, and Rosetta are the most conspicuous as modern seats. Sir John Adam Hay, Bart., of Haystoune and Kingsmeadows, who is the principal proprietor of the parish, has thrown over the Tweed, in a romantic glen, about a mile below the town, an elegant wire bridge, which is much admired. The name of the town has been spelt different ways at different periods—Peblys, Pebles, and Peeblis—and the present orthography is of no older date than the last century. For a long period Peebles has consisted of two towns, respectively called New and Old; the former occupies the ridge of a peninsula projecting westward, along the northern side of which flows the Eddleston before mentioned, over which is a bridge forming a communication with the Old Town, which lies on the face of sloping ground. The Eddleston water, by a bend round the head of the peninsula, falls into the Tweed, over which there is another bridge of five arches, which has been widened and greatly improved The town is neat and clean, and the streets and principal shops are lighted with gas by a joint-stock company. Since the opening of the railway between here and Edinburgh, and the Caledonian Company's branch from Symington, a vast number of visitors from hence and more distant places have made this place their residence in summer, which has materially assisted to promote its prosperity; some very tasteful villas have been erected for private residences, as well as to accommodate the numerous visitors. Of the public buildings, independent of those for divine worship, the most conspicuous, either in respect to magnitude or architectural prominence, are Chambers' Institution, the Town and County Halls, in which assemblies and other meetings are held, and the Public schools. As a town profiting by manufactures or external trade, Peebles takes a station inferior to many towns of less magnitude, and not so happily favoured by situation. Formerly the manufacture of serges was carried on to some extent, and at the beginning of the present century that of fine cotton cloths were introduced; but these branches have gone to decay. There are, however, four woollen mills, which give employment to a large number of hands, and several good hotels. The Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the British Linen Company Bank have each a branch here. A newspaper is published here weekly, the Peebles-shire Advertiser and County Newspaper, which has a good circulation.

The Chambers' Institution is a fine building in High street, containing a library of 13,000 volumes, a reading room, museum, or gallery of art, comprising many rare specimens from the museums of the Vatican, the Louvre, the British Museum, the Royal Institution Academy, Edinburgh, the students of Mr. D. Brucciana, London, and Mr. J. Annan, Edinburgh, and other collections. Within the edifice is also a large hall for lectures and exhibitions, and a county museum. This valuable property was presented to the burgh by the late Dr. William Chambers, of the eminent firm W. & R. Chambers, whose names have been so long and honourably associated with the cheap literature of the country. A native of Peebles, Dr. Chambers always evinced a lively interest in the well-being of the burgh, and, as a lasting and substantial proof of his desire for its material and intellectual advancement, purchased the building known as the Queensbury Lodge, and at considerable expense had it remodelled so as to form the above useful and ornamental pile. In the quadrangle of the institution stands the old cross of Peebles, which was restored to the burgh by Sir Adam Hay, Bart., after a sojourn of half a century at Kingsmeadows.

It is not satisfactorily ascertained at what period Peebles was erected a royal burgh; Alexander III. was a munificent patron of it, and its original charter is supposed to have been bestowed by that monarch. Succeeding kings recognised its right to the distinction, among whom was James VI., whose charter granted to the burgesses an extensive range of landed property and right of common in different parts, nearly the whole of which has been lost to the inhabitants. The government is vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, seven councillors and town clerk. A sheriff court is held on Tuesday and Thursday, and a sheriff small debt court every Friday; general meetings of the commissioners of supply, road trustees and freeholders of the shire take place here in the months of April and September, and the meetings of lieutenancy as occasion requires. A poorhouse has been erected on the Rosetta road, in a well-chosen situation. The Royal Company of Archers, or Queen's Body Guard for Scotland, come to Peebles from Edinburgh occasionally, attired in the ancient and elegant dress of the bowmen of Scotia to shoot for the old-established prize of a silver arrow, given by the burgh to the most successful marksman.

The places of worship are for those of the Established Church, the Free Church, Episcopalians, United Presbyterians and Roman Catholics; the last-named on the Rossetta road, was erected in 1858, by the exertions of the Rev. J. Chapperton, aided by numerous friends. The new Established church, erected on the site of the former edifice, was opened March 24th, 1887, and cost about £10,000. It is built of stone, and is designed in the style of the thirteenth century period of Gothic architecture of the Scottish type, and contains upward of 1,200 sittings. The east front faces the High street and the south front the bridge over the Tweed, and stands at a considerable height above it. The architect was Mr. William Young, of London. The Free church is a neat building, and the Episcopal church is finished in a superior style, and embellished with a beautiful window of stained glass. There are several friendly societies, and some excellent schools, both public and private; for the latter this town has been long and deservedly celebrated, with respect both to the method of instruction and the salubrity of their situation. The ruins of the two ancient churches are still extant, one of which was dedicated to St. Andrew, the other built by Alexander III. in the middle of the thirteenth century, and dedicated to the Holy Cross and St. Nicholas; the same monarch erected likewise a house contiguous, for himself, which continued a royal residence until the accession of James VI. to the throne of England. Among the objects in the town and neighbourhood which generally attract attention is Neidpath Castle, a noble ruin, looking down upon the town and the Tweed from a romantic glen, about a mile distant, to the west. The building is a massive tower, and, with its interesting site and localities, is the delight of the draughtsman. This locality is much resorted to in summer for its excellent trout and salmon fishing. Half a mile to the east of the town, on a hill called Janet's Brae, may be discerned the traces of two ancient British camps. The market is held on a Tuesday, and the fairs on the second Tuesday in January; the first Tuesday in March (for hiring servants); the second Wednesday in May, and the first Tuesday after the 18th of July (for wool); the Tuesday next before the 24th of August, the Tuesday before 12th of September, the second Tuesday in October, and the Tuesday before the 12th of December. The parish of Peebles has an area of 16,597 statute acres, and by the returns for 1871 had a population numbering 3,172, and in 1881, 4,059, of which the town contained 3,495.

EDDLESTON (or Eddlestone) is a parish and village, the latter 4 miles N. from Peebles, situated on both sides of the Eddleston water, which takes its rise from various springs on the north and north-east boundaries, and at Cowie's Linn forms a cascade thirty-five feet high. The South Esk has also its source out of a small lake within two miles of the village. Anciently the kirk and its small hamlet stood among the hills to the east, where some vestiges of them still survive the depreciation of time. The church of the present village is a modern building, with a school attached. Acreage, 18,490; population in 1881, 711.

BROUGHTON, GLENHOLM and KILBUCHO are incorporated and contiguous parishes, agricultural and pastoral. The village of Broughton stands on the road from Edinburgh to Dumfries, and from Peebles to Biggar, and is remarkable for its neatness. A branch of the Caledonian Railway from Symington to Peebles passes through the parish. There is a church of the Establishment belonging to the united parishes. Acreage, 18,065; population in 1881, 665.

DRUMMELZIER (pronounced Drumellyer) is a parish in the south-western part of the county, lying on the east bank of the Tweed, where also stands Drummelzier Castle, formerly a seat of the once powerful family of Tweedie. It is surrounded by some beautiful grounds, and is the last of a chain of fortresses placed on the banks of the Tweed, which are seen every two or three miles in pursuing the course of the stream. The parish church stands on the Powsail rivulet, a little way above its junction with the Tweed. Acreage, 17,948; population in 1881, 208.

KIRKURD parish lies on the western confines of the county and is bounded on the north by the Tarth, a tributary of the Tweed. From the first-named river the land rises in finely cultivated and enclosed grounds, and then becomes hilly, with eminences covered with thriving plantations. The ancient church of Kirkurd belonging at an early period to the bishops of Glasgow, one of whom gave it to the hospital of Solta, the property of which charitable institution it remained until transferred to the hospital of Trinity Church, Edinburgh. Acreage, 5,967; population in 1881, 282.

LYNE and MEGGET are two parishes ecclesiastically united, though not adjacent to each other. Lyne lies on the left bank of the stream of that name, while Megget is situated within the southern border of the county, near the head of Ettrick and Yarrow. It is a bleak, hilly and pastoral district, intersected by the small stream Megget water, which falls into St. Mary's Loch. Acreage, 17,227; population in 1881, 204.

MANOR parish is bounded by Peebles on the north and Megget on the south, and its northern extremity abuts on the Tweed. The district is the vale of the Manor water, which rises in its southern hilly quarter, and falls into the Tweed about two miles west of Peebles, and from which the new water supply for Peebles is taken. The parish formerly belonged to the rector of Peebles, and is supposed to derive its name from being the manor of that churchman. Several curiosities exist in this locality; among these the remains of a Roman camp, a tower raised on an eminence, supposed to have been erected as a watch tower in early troublous times, and a huge upright stone, of great age, perforated with many holes. But the greatest attraction is, perhaps, the cottage once inhabited by the late David Ritchie, a deformed and eccentric dwarf, from whom, it is said, Sir Walter Scott drew the fictitious character of the "Black Dwarf," in his novel of that name. The cottage is situated in the vale near the public road at the farm steading called Woodhouse. Acreage, 16,622; population in 1881, 277.

SKIRLING is a small parish and village—the latter 25 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, and 2½ N.W. from Broughton, situated on the road from the city named to Leadhills. The parish is bounded on the north-east by Kirkurd, on the east by Broughton, on the south by Kilbucho, and on the west by Biggar. It extends about four miles in length from north to south, having a general breadth of one mile and a half, with hilly surface, but green and fertile, and well cultivated. Acreage, 3,423; population in 1881, 274.

STOBO is a generally well cultivated and planted parish in the western part of the county, lying for the most part on the left bank of the Tweed, and extending about six miles in length by four in breadth. The greater part of the parish is hilly and of a pastoral character; but adjacent to the Tweed and the Lyne the land is well cultivated, and some of it finely planted—the latter character of improvement especially in the grounds surrounding Stobo Castle, a modern and beautiful edifice, situated a short distance from the parish church, within view of the Tweed. Within the parish are extensive slate quarries, which, however, have not been wrought for some years. Acreage, 10,302; population in 1881, 467.

TWEEDSMUIR about the middle of the 17th century formed part of the parish of Drummelzier, when it was erected into a separate parish. It lies in the south-western corner of the county, with Lanarkshire on its western border. There are several ancient and rude strongholds in the parish, some of them dignified by the name of "Castles," but having few features of the fortress character. Within the bounds of the parish the river Tweed is augmented by the streams of the Fruid and Talla. Acreage, 23,469; population in 1881, 215.

WEST LINTON,

NEWLANDS, NOBLEHOUSE, ROMANNO BRIDGE, CARLOPS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

WEST LINTON is a parish and village; the latter, which is irregularly built, is 16 miles S.S.W. from Edinburgh, 14 N.W. from Peebles, and 11 N.N.E. from Biggar, situated on the banks of the Lyne water. Besides this stream, the parish is watered by the North Esk; and although the greater part of the district is hilly, it is fertile, and famed for its excellent sheep pasturage. A church of the Establishment, one for the congregation of United Presbyterians, and one for the Episcopalians are the places of worship. Linton confers the title of baron upon the family of Traquair. A branch of the Bank of Scotland and a savings bank are established in the village, and there are several good schools. The parish comprises an area of 23,256 statute acres, and its population in 1881 was 1,117; of this number 434 were returned for the village.

NEWLANDS is a parish lying between West Linton and Eddleston, watered by the Lyne and a small tributary stream called the Tarth. The surface is diversified with hill and dale, and the hills are mostly green, without heath. Trees thrive in every part of the parish, and the greater part is enclosed by hedgegrows and fences. The parish church, a small but neat edifice, is situated on the left bank of the Lyne water; and at the confluence of that stream with the Tarth stand the ruins of Drochil Castle, once a large structure, partly erected by the Regent Morton, and left unfinished when he was put to death on the scaffold. Acreage of the parish, 12,518; population in 1881, 819.

NOBLEHOUSE, in Newlands parish, was formerly known by an inn at which the trustees of the turnpike roads used to assemble. These meetings are now transferred to the County Hall, Peebles. The seat ROMANNO, in the parish, was at the end of the seventeenth century the property and residence of Dr. Alexander Pennycuick, the author of some clever poems and a poetical "Description of Tweeddale," a district of which he was a native.

CARLOPS, in West Linton parish, is a small village, situate on the northern verge of the county, about 3 miles N.E. from West Linton. It originated in the year 1784, and takes its name from some localities in the neighbourhood called "Carling loups," in allusion to a witch or carling who, it is said, "kept the country side in fear," in those parts, and whose traditionary character, it is asserted, furnished to Ramsay the idea of "Manse" in his pastoral of the "Gentle Shepherd."

PERTHSHIRE.

THIS is one of the most extensive counties in Scotland, lying nearly in the centre of the kingdom, whose great northern and southern divisions it may be said in some measure to connect. It is bounded on the east by the county of Forfar; on the south-east by the counties of Kinross and Fife—from the latter county it is separated for a considerable distance by the Firth of Tay; further on the south its boundaries are Stirlingshire and the small county of Clackmannan, which latter it embraces on both sides; on the south-west Dumbarton touches it for a short distance; on the west it is bounded by Argyleshire; and on the north-west and north by Inverness-shire. The figure of the county is very irregular, being intruded upon by other counties in some quarters, and having many indentations and projections in other parts; but for these circumstances its form would be nearly that of a perfect circle. From the Firth of Forth at Culross, on the extreme south, to the Forest of Athole, at the source of the Tilt, on the north, it measures sixty-eight miles; and from Meigle on the east, to Argyleshire on the west, about seventy-seven miles. The contents of the area of Perthshire are estimated at 1,664,690 acres, or 2,601 square miles; and in size it ranks as the fourth, and in population as the eighth of the Scottish counties.

EARLY HISTORY.—The monuments of antiquity which exist in Perthshire are sufficiently numerous to afford a field of curious investigation. Lying northward of the Roman wall, this shire was the theatre of the last struggle for independence which the inhabitants of the low country of Scotland made against the arms of their skilful and then invincible oppressors; the final and most distinguished battle fought by the Britons was that against Agricola, under a leader to whom the Romans have given the name of Galcacus. One of the roads formed by the invaders, passing along the district of Strathearn towards Perth, may still be traced, and also from Perth along Strathmore, to the extremity of the county; the remains of several encampments, likewise, are at this day observable, particularly one at Ardoch, in the parish of Muthill, the largest and most conspicuous in Scotland. This shire also possesses antiquarian remains of a later age and history, in ruined towers and religious structures, the district having once been the residence of a number of powerful chiefs, and of a large body of churchmen. Before the Reformation and during the domination of Episcopacy, Perthshire formed the ample diocese of a bishop whose seat was at Dunkeld, as well as another bishopric at Dunblane.

SOIL, SURFACE, AND CLIMATE.—Perthshire may be considered the Yorkshire of Scotland; like that immense county it is subdivided into districts, which previous to the jurisdiction established in 1748, were stewartries under the power of different great landed proprietors; the names of these various districts (or feudalities) are Menteith, Gowrie, Perth Proper, Strathearn, Stormont, Breadalbane, Rannoch, Balquhidder and Athole. Little attention, however, is now paid to these divisions, and the county is arranged more naturally under the two extensive denominations of Highland and Lowland, the range of Grampians forming the line of demarcation. Eighteen parishes belong to the Highland portion, while that of the Lowland comprises fifty-eight. The soil of Perthshire comprehends all the varieties known in Scotland—the carse and loamy being prevalent on the banks of the rivers, and the sandy and tillable classes on the sides of the hills; in many places are extensive mosses, particularly in Menteith district, but with the progress of agriculture some of these have been partially reclaimed. Within the last century there has been a great deal of planting in Perthshire, greatly to the amelioration of the climate and the advantage of the agriculturist. His Grace the late Duke of Athole acted a most distinguished part in the rearing of plantations; it appears from returns published in 1830, that he planted 15,473 English acres, the number of plants amounting to the enormous number of 27,231,600; of these plantations, the principal portion, to the amount of about 8,600 acres, are of larch, about 1,000 of oak, the remainder being Scotch fir, spruce fir, a few acres of birch, &c. The same patriotic nobleman exerted himself most beneficially in the improvement of the roads of the county, which have been brought into excellent condition. During the present century, a prodigious and most gratifying change has been effected in the agriculture of Perthshire, the low parts of which now vie in rural cultivation, wealth, and beauty with any district in Scotland; the upper portion of the county is still devoted to the pasturage of sheep and cattle, which are mostly driven southwards for sale and consumption. Wheat, oats, barley, beans and turnips are all cultivated, and yield good results. The climate on the whole is mild and salubrious, especially in the south, but in the north and west the cold is more general in consequence of the elevated nature of the country; these districts are, nevertheless, dry and healthy, being screened by the Grampians from the northern blasts. The mountains of greatest altitude in Perthshire are:—Ben Lawers, 4,015; Ben More, 3,903; Ben Glea, 3,724; Schiehallion, 3,561; Ben Derig, 3,550; Ben Ardalanach, 3,500; Ben Ledi, 3,009; Ben Venue, 3,000; Ben Chonzi, 2·922; Farragon, 2,584; Ben Achally, 1,800; Birnam Hill (mentioned in Shakespere's play of "Macbeth"), 1,580; Turleum, 1,400; Bloir, 1,300; King's Seat, 1,196; Lochtown Hill, 1,173; Kimpurnie, 1,151; Beingloe, 1,040; Dunsinane (whereon was a stronghold of Macbeth, twelve miles from Birnam Hill), 1,024; Kinnoul, 700; and Barry, 688 feet above the level of the sea.

PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The subject of the mineralogy of Perthshire affords sufficient materials to excite and to reward the curiosity and research of the scientific student of the work of nature; but in a commercial or economical point of view its minerals are of no great importance. At Culross, upon the Forth, coal has been wrought for ages; but from its situation it is of little advantage to this county. Limestone rocks are found in a variety of localities, both in the high and low country; but the use of lime is greatly impeded from the want of proper fuel for burning it—peat, which is the fuel of all the inland districts, being a weak and ineffectual agent in the process of calcination. Marble of a superior quality is worked near Glentilt; beds of fire-clay have been discovered near Culross, and in that neighbourhood, on the Devon, there is abundance of ironstone. About Callander that species of rock called breccia, or more familiarly, "plum pudding stone," is not uncommon; and here also, as in other parts, are various kinds of slate. A chain of sandstone runs from Gartree to the vicinity of Crieff; upon the Tay is one of the most celebrated stone quarries in this country; the principal stone of which the Grampians consist is granite. Perthshire abounds with game of nearly every description, though the large species is now considerably diminished in numbers; the red deer, or stag, may be said to inhabit the forest and mountain glades in the most perfect state of nature and wildness; it is cautious in the extreme, and singularly jealous of the human form, eluding with wonderful effect the wiles of the sportsman. A variety of other game are also inhabitants of these wilds; among the rest, the roe, a much more familiar animal than the stag, appearing, even in the summer, in the woodlands and plantations of the valleys, down to the habitable places. In regard to its natural features, Perth is esteemed a county of first-rate interest. From its inland situation, Perthshire of course does not comprise any combination of marine and mountain scenery, which form the great attraction of the West Highlands; yet, as it abounds in inland lakes, and possesses rising grounds of as grand a character as that district, it is in no respect inferior as the object of "a tour in search of the picturesque and beautiful;" while its charming plains may be said to form an additional attraction. The principal pursuit of industry in the towns and villages of Perthshire is the weaving of linen goods; in connection with this branch of manufacture, flax spinning mills and a considerable number of bleach fields are established. The manufactures of the county are not, however, wholly confined to that of linen—tweeds, winceys, blankets, and other woollen goods being manufactured. Cotton spinning works are in constant operation at Stanley and Doune; and considerable dye works, distilleries, breweries, and tanneries, together with iron foundries, engineering works, &c., are found in several towns and villages. It may be remarked that the whole of this large and populous county exhibits in almost every portion manifestations of being in a thriving and prosperous condition, and affords a strong example of what has been effected during the last century, and a proof, in the civilization of the country, of the exchange of a life of almost savage strife ignorance, and poverty for one of intelligence, peace, and all the comforts to be procured by industry.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAYS.—Like all elevated countries, Perthshire abounds with extensive lakes and rivers, which occupy valleys lying between lofty mountains. The chief running waters are the Tay, the Earn, the Garry, the Bran, the Almond, the Teath, the Allan, the Dochart, the Tummel, the Bruar, the Ericht, the Ardle, the Shee, and the Isla—besides innumerable third and fourth-rate rivers and streamlets of all sizes. The Forth, from rising in Stirlingshire, is not considered a Perthshire river, though it flows along a large portion of its south-west quarter. The chief lakes of the county are Loch Katrine, Loch Achray, Loch Ard, Loch Voil, Loch Lubnaig, Loch Dochart, and Loch Earn. These are in the south-west part of the shire; Loch Tay in the centre of the mountainous district, and Loch Rannoch, Loch Ericht, and Loch Lydoch, the two latter in part only, in the north-west quarter. In the lower divisions there are some smaller and less important lakes. The most remarkable mineral waters as yet discovered in this county are those of Pitcaithly, near the Bridge of Earn, which have been long famed for their efficacy in curing scrofula and complaints of the stomach. The county is intersected by the Caledonian, the North British, and the Highland railways, and from these main lines run many important branches.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &C.—Perthshire comprehends seventy-two entire parishes and twelve parts of parishes. The county is divided into ten districts, each under the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace court and a body of deputy-lieutenants; it is further divided into two sheriff-substitutteries—the seat of one being Perth, the other Dunblane. The shire contains only two royal burghs—Perth and Culross; the former returns one member to Parliament, and the latter is a contributory burgh, joining with Stirling, Queensferry, Inverkeithing, and Dunfermline, in sending another. The county for parliamentary purposes is now separated into two divisions, and sends one member for each. The present representatives are: East Division, Sir John G. S. Kinloch, Bart.; West Division, Sir Donald Currie, K.C.M.G. The parliamentary constituency for 1888-89 is: East Division, 7,790; West Division, 8,177. The lord lieutenant of the county is the Duke of Athole, K.T. According to the census returns for 1871, the shire possessed a population of 60,663 males and 67,105 females; total, 127,768; in 1881 the numbers returned were—males, 61,552, females, 67,455; total, 129,007; showing an increase in the ten years of 1,239. The valuation of the county for 1888-89 (exclusive of railways and waterworks, which is £94,440) is £880,289.

ABERFELDY,

WITH THE PARISHES OF WEEM AND DULL.

ABERFELDY is a thriving and neat town, partly in the parish of Dull, and partly in that of Logierait, 18 miles N.W. from Dunkeld, 9 W. from Logierait, and 6 N.E. from Kenmore; situated on the south bank of the beautiful river Tay, on the great Highland road, which crosses the river by a bridge, elegant and substantial, of three arches, constructed by the celebrated General Wade. This part of the county is justly recognised as the centre of the most beautiful scenes on the Tay, comprising mountain, dale, and wood, and the locality is likewise attractive from its proximity to the romantic falls of Moness. The village contains several establishments of business importance: these include branches of the Bank of Scotland, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and a woollen manufactory, &c. There are also two large and commodious hotels, the Breadalbane Arms and the Station Hotel, the former being much patronised in the season by visitors on account of the facilities it affords for fishing in the Tay and Loch-na-Craigh, parties staying at the hotel only having the privilege of the loch, while in the river, the hotel has a joint right with the Aberfeldy Angling Club. The village is well lighted with gas, and supplied with water. Owing to the increase of the town, it has been found necessary to adopt the Lindsay Police Act of 1862 and it is now governed by a chief magistrate, who is an ex-officio justice of peace for the county, and eight commissioners. A sheriff small debt court is held in the Town Hall on the first Monday of April, August and December, when claims are settled to any amount not exceeding £12. The Ballinluig and Aberfeldy branch of the Highland Railway terminates here. A monument was erected in 1887 to the Black Watch, in the form of a cairn, at a cost of about £500, to mark where the regiment was first formed. A new Board school was erected in 1886, at a cost of about £2,000, the old school being now used as a Town Hall. The Established, Free Church, Congregational and Roman Catholic bodies have each a place of worship. Several fairs were formerly held in the course of the year; but the only one now is on the last Thursday in October (old style), for cattle and sheep; weekly cattle sales are also held on Thursday. Population in 1881, 1,960.

WEEM is an extensive Highland parish in the district of Breadalbane. It is so mixed up with and intersected by neighbouring parishes that no accurate idea can be given of its extent and boundaries. The surface is mountainous and rugged; it is watered by the rivers Tay, Lyon, Lochy, and Dochart. The church of Weem is 7¼ miles N.N.W. from Edinburgh, 34 N.W. from Perth, and 9 W. from Logierait. There is an Episcopal church (St. David's), built in the Norman style of architecture, at a cost of £2,000. It was the gift of Sir Robert Menzies, Bart. and friends. Near the church is Castle Menzies, the seat of Sir Robert Menzies, Bart. It is a handsome building, with lofty turrets, surrounded by fine plantations, pleasure grounds and orchards—a spot presenting a refreshing contrast to many other parts of the district. Near the castle is the Weem Hotel, an establishment admirably adapted for the reception of families and other visitors. It is sheltered from the north winds, and is placed in the midst of most delightful and interesting scenery, with which this locality abounds. Amongst the objects of interest in the immediate vicinity are Taymouth Castle, ruins of Garth Castle, Maggernie Castle, Birks of Aberfeldy, Falls of Moness, Acharn, and Keltney. The parish possesses an acreage of 41,887, and by the returns of 1881 had a population of 474.

DULL is also a large parish, assimilating in its localities with Weem, so that a just estimate of its extent cannot be arrived at. It comprehends, however, a general length of thirty miles, by a breadth of about twelve. The river Tummel bounds the district on the north-east, and the Lyon and Tay on the south, which rivers abound with excellent salmon, and the lakes (of which there are fifteen, of large and small dimensions) abound with fine trout, pike and eels. The military road from Stirling to Inverness passes through the entire length of the parish. The church stands at APPIN, about two miles and a half west from Weem. The lofty mountain Schiehallion, which rises upwards of 3,500 feet, is seen on the northern border, with its brow shrouded in mist. The village of Dull is situated two miles west from Castle Menzies, and was at one time the seat of a Roman Catholic college, of which no traces now remain. An Established church is in the village. Acreage, 63,417. The population of the parish in 1881 numbered 2,565.

ABERNETHY AND ABERARGIE,

WITH THE PARISH OF DRON.

ABERNETHY is a parish lying partly in the county of Fife and partly in Perthshire. The village—said to have been the capital of the Pictish kingdom of Scotland—is scattered over a considerable space of ground. It is 8 miles S.E. from Perth, and 14 N.W. from Cupar, in Fife, about half a mile south of the river Earn, near to its junction with the Tay. It is seated to the south of a spacious and rich agricultural dale, bounded by lofty hills, which are chiefly planted with timber. Some of the houses are tolerably well built, but the only structure deserving particular notice is a circular tower, the only one of its kind (with the exception of that at Brechin) in Scotland. It stands in an angle of the burial ground of the Established church, and is about seventy-five feet high and twenty four feet in diameter at its base. The date of its erection is unknown, but tradition ascribes its origin to the Picts, who are said to have built it in one night, and that the stones of which it is constructed were removed from a distance of twelve miles by a formed line, one man passing them on to another until the whole work was completed. On the outside of the tower is yet to be seen the jougs (a padlocked collar and chain), a memorial of the discipline to which offenders were subjected in by-gone days. Abernethy is a burgh of barony, governed by two bailies, fifteen councillors, a treasurer, and a town-clerk; but it has lately been constituted a police burgh for sanitary purposes, under the Lindsay Police Act, 1862. The inhabitants are for the most part employed in salmon fishing and weaving. The parish of Abernethy is bounded by the river Earn on the north, on the east by Newburgh and Abdie, on the south by Auchtermuchty and Strathmiglo, and on the west by Dron and Arngask. It is between five and six miles both in breadth and length, comprising 9,544 acres, and, besides the village of its name already described, contains the small one of ABERARGIE, situated about a mile to the west. A hill, a little to the north of Binns Farm commands one of the finest views in Scotland, comprising Strathmore, Strathearn, the Grampians, Ochils, Sidlaws, Pentland hills, Firth of Forth, Lochleven Castle, Glen Farg, &c. A fair is held on the fourth Wednesday in May. In 1881 this parish had a population of 1,714, and the village 906.

DRON, a parish, 4 miles S. from Perth, in the south-western extremity of Perthshire, extending into the beautiful district of Strathearn, is divided from Abernethy on the east by the rivulet Farg. Although in some parts the surface is broken and irregular, in the lower parts the land is flat and fertile, being a portion of the rich carse of the Earn. The church—a handsome Gothic edifice—is a fine object on the rising ground to the left, on approaching the Bridge of Earn from the south. The Glenfarg Railway is one of the connecting links the North British Railway Co. are constructing in connection with the Forth Bridge, to accelerate their traffic between the south and north of that bridge. It will pass through the parish of Dron, and have its junction with the North British line at Bridge of Earn. This parish, which embraces an area of 4,188 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 335.

ALYTH,

WITH GLENISLA AND RUTHVEN.

ALYTH is a parish, and contains the thriving town of its name; the latter is 62 miles N. from Edinburgh, 20 N. from Perth, 17 N.W. from Dundee, 12 W. from Forfar, 5 N.E. from Blairgowrie, and 4 N.W. from Meigle, pleasantly situated at the base of a range of hills on the small river Alyth. The parish is mostly in the county of Perth, but extends into that of Forfar, including a portion of Mount Blair, a conspicuous hill 2,260 feet above the level of the sea. The parish is divided into two considerable districts by the hills of Alyth, Loyal, and Barry. The southern district lying in the strath is about 4 miles long and 3 broad. This, as well as the tract of land towards the hills, is fertile and verdant, and watered by the river Isla and several small streams. The town has considerably improved since the completion of the railway in 1861. There are two mills employed in the manufacture of linen, which is carried on here to a considerable extent, and finds employment for a large number of the inhabitants. The new mill, erected by David Smith & Son, in 1873, is most complete, and, in addition to the ordinary work, dyeing, bleaching, and calendering is carried on. Alyth was erected a burgh of barony by James III., and a court was held on the first Tuesday in every month; but owing to the increase of the town, it has been found necessary to adopt the Lindsay Police Act of 1862, and the town is now governed by a chief magistrate, who is an ex-officio justice of peace for the county, and eight commissioners. A new and substantial stone bridge was erected in 1883 over the burn of Alyth, at a cost of nearly £900. The town is plentifully supplied with good water. Being within an easy distance from Dundee, there are a number of visitors from that quarter during the summer months. The late Hon. William Ogilvy, of Loyal, left his large and valuable library of several thousand volumes for the benefit of the town and parish of Alyth. He bequeathed the sum of £500 to support and perpetuate his gift—£300 to be expended in erecting a suitable building for the same, the interest of the remaining £200 going towards the support of the institution. There are also several other benefactions, among which may be mentioned the Balendoch Fund, a sum of £30 per annum, bequeathed by the late Gilbert Hay, Esq., for the education and clothing of six boys and six girls, those of the names of Hay and Halkett being preferred; the Fenton Mortification being £800 left by Mr. John Fenton, for providing coals and clothing for the poor; and the Ramsay bequest, being the interest of £118 left by the late Dowager Lady Ramsay, of Bamff, to be distributed annually amongst the poor of the district. There are two banking establishments in the town, and two first-class hotels. The places of worship consist of the parish church, an imposing edifice in the Norman style, with a lofty spire; a Free church, and a chapel each for United Presbyterians and Episcopalians. Markets are held on the fourth Wednesday in January, February, March, April and December; the third Tuesday in May, hiring, cattle and sheep; the second Tuesday in June (old style); the first Tuesday in August; and the first Tuesday and Wednesday after the 11th of November. The entire parish contains an acreage of 23 296. The population in 1881 numbered 3,521, of which the town contained 2,377.

GLENISLA is a parish in the county of Forfar, lying to the west of Lintrathen, and extending about 21 miles in length, and in general between 6 and 7 in breadth. A great part of it is the vale through which flows the river Isla. The kirktown of Glenisla stands on the left bank of the river. The castle of Forfar, a conspicuous object in the upper portion of the glen, was erected many centuries ago, but is now a ruin. In the upper reach of the parish is a fine deer forest of the Tulchan part of the Airlie estates. The places of worship are the parish and Free churches. There are also three public schools. A market is held on the Thursday before the last Wednesday in September. The acreage is 41,242, and the population in 1881 was 791.

RUTHVEN is a parish situated on the north side of the vale of Strathmore, county of Forfar. It is about 2½ miles in length by about 2 in breadth. The river Isla divides the parish from Alyth. Colonel Thomas Wedderburn Ogilvy, of Rutl en House, is the sole heritor. Several years ago the proprietor erected at his own cost a beautiful parish church, with manse. Acreage, 2,045; population in 1881, 195.

AUCHTERARDER,

ABERUTHVEN, BLACKFORD, TRINITY GASK, AND FINDO GASK.

AUCHTERARDER is a parish and seat of a presbytery; the town, a considerable one, and of some consequence in manufactures, is 20 miles N. from Stirling, and 14 S.W. from Perth; situated on the high road between the two, on the south side of the river Earn (whose stream is famed for trout and salmon), and it is a station on the Scottish Central Section of the Caledonian Railway. This place, which at one period enjoyed the distinction of being a royal burgh, consists of one large street which extends nearly a mile in length, and is famous as the place where orginated the disruption in the Church of Scotland, with the late Rev. Robert Young. The town owns about 200 acres of arable land, under a special Act of Parliament, which is managed by thirteen commissioners, two of whom retire annually, with the exception of the proprietor of the Lower Barony, whose seat at the Board is permanent; power is given in the Act to feu 30 acres. In 1873 experimental borings were made on the land for coal; none, however, was found, but a splendid flow of excellent water has continued to rise from the bores ever since, and are known as the Coalbore springs. From 1790 to 1864 hand-loom weaving was extensively carried on, but this branch of industry has been superseded by the power-loom, and at the present time there are several woollen factories, which give employment to a great number of the inhabitants. There are also two dye works in the parish. The town's water supply is one of the finest in the kingdom; it was introduced in 1832, by the late Captain Aytoun, of Glendevon, and in the centre of the town is Aytoun Hall, which was erected to his memory in 1872, by the inhabitants. The ruins of Kincardine Castle, the ancient seat of the Montrose family, are in the neighbourhood. The road to the castle from Auchterarder passes between the bellows and forge of an ingenious blacksmith named Hally. Kincardine glen, which is spanned by the Scottish Central Section of the Caledonian Railway by a fine viaduct, is a place of great natural beauty. Near Auchterarder is the combination poor house for the accommodation of this and fifteen adjoining parishes. Within recent years Auchterarder has celebrated the jubilee of two ministers, both of the U.P. Church. The places of worship are an Established, a Free, and two United Presbyterian churches, and one for the Roman Catholics. There are three Board, an Endowed, and one or two private schools in the parish. There is a corn market held on Saturday, and a live-stock sale on the last Tuesday in each month. The population of the parish, the area of which is 11,181 acres, was in 1881, 3,648, the town possessing 2,666 of this number.

ABERUTHVEN is a small village in the parish of and situated miles N. from Auchterarder, on the road to Perth. The village contains a Free church and the ruins of an old church, part of which has been converted into a vault for the Duncan family, of Damside, and the Graeme family, of Inchbakie; and a short distance hence is a mausoleum belonging to the noble family of Montrose. Dunning is the nearest railway station, about 2½ miles distant. Population in 1881, 331.

BLACKFORD is a parish and village, the latter being situated four miles W. of Auchterarder, on the road from Stirling to Perth, at the extremity of the Ochil Hills. The parish is watered by the Allan, from the north of which river the ground rises and forms a group of sandy hills, with a number of vast hollows, some of them round, and others extending in length, forming little valleys, through which for the most part run small brooks. The village is of considerable size and importance, containing a tannery and two breweries, one of the latter (R. & D. Sharp, Limited) having been in existence since 1830. The other trades are building, shoe manufacturing, and others usually found in villages. There is a branch of the Bank of Scotland, an Established and a Free church, and there are three Board schools in the parish and one in connection with the Free church. At Tullibardine there is an old chapel in a good state of preservation, inside of which is a vault where the Strathallan family are interred. The Scottish Central Section of the Caledonian line passes through the village, and has a station here. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,595, and of the village, 679. Acreage, 21,453.

FINDO GASK is a parish about 7 miles N.E. of Auchterarder. It contains an Established church and a public school. The nearest railway station is at Dunning, about three miles distant. Acreage, 5,185. Population in 1881, 364.

TRINITY GASK is a parish about 5 miles N. of Auchterarder. The parish contains an Established church, a United Presbyterian church, and a public school. Adjoining Orchard Farm are the ruins of Gasken Hall, the scene of Wallace's interview with Fawdon's ghost, and on the farm of Cowgask there is a mineral well, the water of which is carried to Crieff and dispensed in the Well House in connection with the hydropathic establishment. It is said to be good in cases of dyspepsia. Acreage, 5,689. Population in 1881, 396.

BLAIR ATHOLE,

WITH THE BRIDGE OF TILT, CALVINE AND STRUAN.

BLAIR ATHOLE is a small village and parish, included in the district of Athol or Athole. What is now designated the parish of Blair Athole formerly consisted of four parishes, viz., Blair, Lude, Kilmaveonaig, and Strowan. The word Athole signifies pleasant land, and Blair of Athole, the name of the principal valley, means the field or vale of Athole. The district of Athole is forty-five miles in length, and thirty in breadth, and the parish is 24 miles from north-east to south-west, and twenty from north to south. It lies on the north-west Highlands of Perthshire, bounded on the south by Fortingal, Foss and Moulin, and on the north by Inverness and Aberdeenshire, and on the east by Kirkmichael and Moulin, and on the west by Rannoch, and contains a large tract of Highland territory, several of the mountains of which are covered with large and beautiful woods, interspersed with fertile vales, which are in a high state of cultivation. The valley of the Garry, from the pass of Killiecrankie to the point of Strowan, may be considered the nucleus of the parish. The principal lakes and rivers are Loch Garry and Loch Tummel, and the Tummel, Tilt, and Garry all abounding with a variety of fish. The village is situated on the north side of the Garry, 20 miles N.W. from Dunkeld and 7 N.W. from Pitlochry, on the Inverness road, where there is a station on the Highland Railway.

Within a short distance of the village is the noble old Castle of Blair, the family residence of the Duke of Athole, K.T. The castle has been, within the last few years, restored to its original form according to a design by Mr. Bryce, of Edinburgh, and the addition of towers and turrets adds much to its appearance. The woods in the neighbourhood are very fine, some of the larches being the oldest in Scotland. Three miles to the west of the village are the Falls of Bruar, consisting of a succession of cascades in a ravine of romantic beauty. The banks are covered with woods, planted by a late Duke of Athole, in answer to Burns's well-known "Petition of Bruan Water." Neat gas works have been erected, which at present supply the castle and hotels. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, is in operation; and in the village are also two excellent hotels. The acreage of the parish is 181,113; and the population in 1881 was returned as 1,742, of which Blair Athole and Bridge of Tilt numbered 346.

In the parish of Blair Athole is the beautiful little village of BRIDGE OF TILT, separated only from Blair Athole by the water of Tilt, which is crossed by a bridge, that gives the prefix to the name of the place. It consists of a few cottages, the Free church, and also the old Episcopal church of Kilmaveonaig; and its pretty rural aspect is embellished by the beautiful residence and grounds of William M'Inroy, Esq., of Lude. Between the villages of Blair and Bridge of Tilt are situated the parish church, a plain but commodious structure, and the parochial school buildings, which have been much improved.

CALVINE is a hamlet in this parish. The scenery around is very charming, and includes Glen Tilt, the Falls of Fender, &c., all combining to interest the tourist. The principal heritor of the parish is the Duke of Athole.

STRUAN, or STROWAN, is a small village in the parish of Blair Athole, 5 miles N. from the latter place, at which there is one of the parish churches. In the churchyard is a remarkable stone with a Runic inscription, very interesting to antiquarians.

BLAIRGOWRIE,

RATTRAY AND NEW RATTRAY, CLUNIE, BENDOCHY, LETHENDY, KINLOCH AND PERSIE.

BLAIRGOWRIE is a parish containing the thriving town of its name—the latter 12 miles E. from Dunkeld, 5 W. from Alyth, and the same distance N. from Coupar-Angus; beautifully situated, on the southern slope of the range of hills which bound the valley of Strathmore on the north, and at the mouth of the pass through which the great north road to Fort George (by the Spittal of Glenshee and the Castletown of Braemar) runs. The river Ericht passes, close to the town and propels the machinery of several flax-spinning mills on a large scale on both sides of the river; and there is also a linen manufactory, at which carpets also are now made. A branch of the Caledonian railway from Coupar-Angus was opened in 1855 and by its means there is communication with most parts of the United Kingdom. Blairgowrie was created a burgh of barony in the year 1634, by a charter from Charles I. The affairs of the town are now governed by a baron bailie and eleven councillors, and by a board of police commissioners. A sheriff small debt court is held for the disposal of cases not exceeding £12 on the second Saturday in January, April, July and October. A police court sits when necessary. There are five branch banking establishments, two savings banks, and clubs for the votaries of angling, bowling, curling, &c.

The places of worship are two Established, two Free, and an Episcopal church, and chapels for Independents, United Presbyterians and Roman Catholics. Blairgowrie parish is of an irregular form, about eleven miles in length and three in breadth. It is divided into two districts by the Grampians, which rise immediately north of the town; the lower district is highly cultivated and fertile, while the upper is comparatively barren and moorish, with the exception of the banks of the river, which is good alluvial soil. The scenery in the neighbourhood of the town is very beautiful; and in the adjoining parish, about Craighall (the seat of Lieutenant General James Clerk Rattray, C.B.), it is of the most romantic character, and is scarcely surpassed in any part of Scotland; the proprietor kindly permits strangers visiting the place to walk through the entire grounds free on Tuesdays and Fridays. To the lovers of angling no locality could be more suitable for enjoying this amusement, there being not only excellent trout and salmon fishing in the Ericht, the Tay, the Isla and the burns of the Lunan and Lornty (which are all within a moderate distance of the town), but likewise capital perch and pike fishing in the several lochs in the neighbourhood. On account of the inviting attractions around, the salubrity of the air, and the numerous lovely walks in the environs, the town is much frequented in summer by families from more crowded places, who are happy to exchange the confined atmosphere which they usually inhale for the invigorating breezes of the country. Amongst the antiquities of the vicinity, the remains of the Castle of Glascune must be noticed; they present a strikingly picturesque ruin, situated on the precipitous bank of a narrow wooded glen, about two miles from the town. Fairs are held at Blairgowrie on the third Wednesday in March, on the 26th of May (if it falls on Wednesday, if not, on the first Wednesday after), the 23rd of July, the first Wednesday of November, the 22nd of November (or the first Tuesday after), and the Wednesday before Falkirk tryst. A market for cattle and grain is also held every alternate Tuesday, which is well attended. The annual Martinmas market, for hiring and cattle, is held on the 23rd of November, except when the 23rd falls on a Saturday, Sunday or Monday, and there is also one on the first Wednesday in October. The parish has an area of 15,303 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 5,162, of which the town possessed 4,537.

RATTRAY is a parish adjoining Blairgowrie, comprising the villages of OLD and NEW RATTRAY. The former, pleasant but irregular in its buildings, is situated about three-quarters of a mile east from Blairgowrie. New Rattray is of modern erection, and is connected with Blairgowrie by a bridge of four arches crossing the Ericht. The parish extends four miles in length by two in breadth. The surface is much diversified, the land on the banks of the river being arable and fertile, while the higher grounds are only suitable for pasture. On the banks of the river there are flax spinning mills, which afford employment to a large number of the inhabitants. To the south-east, on a rising ground called the Castle hill, remain the vestiges of the ancient Castle of Rattray; and about two miles north of the village stands Craig Hall, on a rock that rises one hundred feet perpendicularly. The places of worship are an Established church, built in 1820, a Free church, one for United Presbyterians, and a Wesleyan chapel, erected in 1887 at a cost of about £3,000. Acreage, 5,982. Population in 1881, 3,051.

CLUNIE parish lies about five miles W. from Blairgowrie; it includes part of the lower range of the Grampians, which are barren, and covered with heather. The scenery, however, on the whole is romantic and pleasing, presenting abundance of wood and water. The loch of Clunie is one of the most beautiful small sheets of water in the country; within it is a small island, on which stands an ancient tower, the property of the Airlie family, which is supposed to have been the birthplace of the "Admirable Crichton," whose father, Sir Robert Crichton, Lord Advocate of Scotland, was then proprietor of the barony of Clunie. The tower is still in good repair, and partly furnished, though rarely occupied; but it is open to strangers desirous of visiting it. On the northern side of the lake lies the charming property of Forneth, belonging to the Speid family. The parish, which embraces an area of 11,384 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 582.

BENDOCHY is a parish in Strathmore, a few miles E. of Coupar-Angus, bounded on the east by the river Isla, and is divided into two parts by the river Ericht. It is twelve miles in length, and from six to eight in breadth. There are seven small lakes in the parish, which has an area of 9,368 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 715.

LETHENDY, a small parish bounded by Caputh on the south, Clunie on the west, and Blairgowrie on the east, is about three miles in length by one in breadth. The land is arable.

KINLOCH is a parish, bounded by Clunie on the south, Blairgowrie on the east, and Bendochy on the north, extending about seven miles in length, by an average breadth of one and a half. There are three lakes in the southern division, namely, Fenzies Loch, Rae Loch, and Marlee Loch. The parish church is situated on the public road, on the south-east verge of the district. Lethendy and Kinloch parishes embrace 7,060 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 404.

PERSIE is an ecclesiastical parish taken from the parishes of Bendochy, Alyth, Meigle, and Blairgowrie.

BRIDGE OF EARN,

AND THE PARISHES OF DUNBARNY AND RHYND.

BRIDGE OF EARN is a village in the parish of Dunbarny, three and a half miles s. from Perth. This village, which has of late years become a great place of resort on account of the celebrity of its mineral spring, is situated on the great north road, and is a station on the Edinburgh and Perth section of the North British Railway. A junction is intended to be effected here between the Glenfarg Railway, now in course of construction, and the North British line. Pitkeathly Wells are situated about a mile and a half from the village, the waters having long been celebrated for affording relief to those afflicted with gravel, scurvy, &c. Moncreiffe House, the seat of Sir Robert D. Moncreiffe, Bart., is a fine mansion, the grounds of which are very extensive, and beautifully wooded, and present a refreshing contrast to other parts of the district. The scenery around is beautiful and romantic. In the neighbourhood are some interesting and attractive objects, the most remarkable of which are the remains of a Pictish camp on the summit of Mordon Hill. In the village are Dunbarny parish church, a Free church and a public school. Population in 1881, 304.

DUNBARNY (or Dumbarny) parish is situated on the south-eastern part of the county, occupying a rich portion of the lower Strathearn district, about a mile and a half s. from Perth. It is bounded by the hill of Mordon (or Moncreiffe) on the north, and on the west by Forgandenny. It is intersected by the river Earn in various windings; the flat and rising grounds being adorned with plantations, avenues, and refreshing hedgerows. The Earn is crossed in this parish by a handsome bridge, giving its name to the village above mentioned. This parish, which embraces an area of 4,060 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 756.

RHYND is a small parish about three miles E. from Bridge of Earn and the same distance S.E. from Perth, situated at the confluence of the Tay and Earn, four miles in length, and one mile in breadth, bounded on the west by the parishes of Dunbarny and Perth, on the north and east by Kinfauns and St. Madroes, from which it is separated by the Tay, and on the south by the parish of Abernethy, from which it is divided by the Earn. The Earl of Wemyss is chief landowner. The Castle of Elcho, now in ruins, was originally of great strength. The church is situated at the south end of the parish. There is also a public school. This parish, which has an area of 2,457 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 297.

CALLANDER,

ABERFOYLE, BALQUHIDDER, BRIDGE OF TURK, LOCHEARNHEAD, PORT OF MENTEITH, RUSKIE, STRATHYRE, GARTMORE, TROSSACHS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CALLANDER is a modern and neat village and parish, and a burgh by the adoption of the Police (Scotland) Act, 1862; 52 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 40 S.W. from Perth, 45 N. from Glasgow, 16 N.W. from Stirling, 8 N.W. from Doune, and 5 N. from Thornhill; situated in a beautiful valley on both sides of the Teith, which river is here crossed by a bridge of three arches; the houses are disposed in regular plan, and covered with blue slates. The places of worship are an Established and a Free church, both of which are handsome modern buildings, and an Episcopal church. There is a Board school and also Free Church school. The town possesses a station on a branch of the Caledonian railway. The facility of railway communication has been the means of bringing a great number of visitors and tourists during the summer to enjoy the beautiful scenery of Callander and neighbourhood; and many first-class villas and cottages have been erected and fitted up to meet their requirements; the three first-class hotels—the Dreadnought, M'Gregor's, and the Caledonian Temperance Hotel—also afford excellent accommodation. About a mile from Callander, and delightfully situated, is the establishment of the Callander Hydropathic Co., Limited, which was opened in June, 1882, and has convenience for about 130 visitors. The scenery around Callander is uncommonly beautiful; immediately above the village is a peculiarly lovely spot formed by the junction of two little rivers, issuing respectively from Loch Lubnaig and Loch Vennacher, which when united form the Teith. Callander may be reckoned the threshold of the Highlands in this quarter. Two miles west of the village is the Pass of Leny, which affords access to a delightful range of mountain prospect; the bridge of Bracklyn is another fine point in the scenery directly surrounding Callander; and the ride to Loch Katrine and the Trossachs (classic scenes), about ten miles from the village, is extremely fine. The parish extends from the banks of the Teith to the Grampians, and is about sixteen miles in length by a breadth of ten. The low grounds are arable and fertile, but the upper country is wild and heathy. Callander has four annual fairs—namely, the third Thursday of March, May 16th, third Tuesday of July, and third Thursday of December. The parish of Callander embraces an area of 51,186 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 2,167; of this number the village contained 1,522.

ABERFOYLE, a parish (and the name of a celebrated pass or long valley between the Highlands and lowlands), is remarkable for its picturesque scenery, its fine lakes and numerous streams, and the marked direction taken by the Grampians through the lower part of it, as well as for producing a great quantity of rare plants, suited to reward the researches of the botanist. The village, or "clachan," of Aberfoyle is the scene of some incidents in the novel of "Rob Roy." At the head of the valley or pass lies Loch Ard, a bright and placid basin, embedded in surrounding woods, over which rises the gracefully towering form of Ben Lomond, one of whose summit platforms ascends upwards of 3,000 feet above the level of the sea. The best view of this noble eminence is obtained from a wooded promontory which juts out into the water (scarcely leaving room for the road that passes on to the westward), and which, it is said, was the spot on which the skirmish occurred, described in the above novel, where Helen Macgregor makes her first appearance. Loch Ard and Loch Chon, near Aberfoyle, are famous for their fishing, being considered the earliest fly-fishing lochs in Scotland, fish taking readily early in March. Mr. Blair's hotel, the "Duilie Nicol Jarvie," affords excellent accommodation to tourists and visitors; there is also a good supply of boats in connection with the hotel for those piscatorially inclined. The North British Railway has a station here. Fairs are held within the parish on the first Friday in August, and the third Thursday in October. The parish of Aberfoyle contains an area of 26,810 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 465.

BALQUHIDDER is a Highland parish, lying in the western extremity of the county, among the Grampians. The village is situated at the east end of Loch Voil, at the distance of 13 miles N.W. from Callander, and is remarkable as the last residence of the famous Rob Roy, whose grave is pointed out in the churchyard. It was visited by Her Majesty and Princesses Louise and Beatrice in 1869. The parish is altogether mountainous and pastoral, and from the number of acclivities forming its sides has obtained the popular appellation of the "Braes of Balquhidder," by which name it is celebrated in Scottish song and legend. It comprises several lofty mountains (among which Ben More rises in conspicuous superiority), and possesses many beautiful lakes, including Loch Doune, Loch Voil, part of Loch Lubnaig, and part of Loch Earn, with several of minor celebrity. Balquhidder has an area of 54,675 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 627 persons.

LOCHEARNHEAD is a beautiful little village in the parish of Balquhidder, situated at the head of Loch Earn, from which it derives its name. This village has been twice visited by the Queen; the first time with the late Prince Consort in 1841, and again in September, 1869, in company with the Princesses Louise and Beatrice, who stayed at the hotel while on a visit to Sir Malcolm and Lady Helen Macgregor, the chief of the Macgregors, whose property, EDINCHIP, is within half a mile of the village. The Callander and Oban Railway possesses a station here, which passes high above the village, on the hillside, looking down on one of the most magnificent views that can be imagined. The station is two miles distant from the hotel, owing to the steep incline required to get over the hill into Glen Dochart. The loch is an elongated sheet of water eight miles in length, one in breadth, and said to be one hundred fathoms deep; it is at the foot of Glen Ogle, a wild pass or outlet from the Breadalbane country and the north-western Highlands. The beautiful situation and quiet character of the place, with the many objects of interest, and the fine scenery, attract many visitors, tourists, and private families during the summer months. The views command the fine scenery of the lake, the upper part of Strathearn, and the mountains, one of the latter (Benvoirlich) rising from the shore to a height of 3,300 feet. In the village are a Free church and two good schools. Excellent fishing may be had on the loch, free to parties staying in the hotel, and omnibuses meet all trains.

PORT OF MENTEITH (or Monteith) is a parish in the ancient district of Monteith, 15 miles N.W. from Stirling. The chief object of attraction in the parish is the Loch or Lake of Menteith, a beautiful sheet of water near the centre of the district, adjoining the church and manse. It is about five miles in circumference, and is adorned by the small island of INCHMAHOLM, where stand the fine remains of a priory or monastery founded in 1238. The ruins of the church and cloisters are very extensive, and exhibit many fine specimens of old architecture of a massive nature. The archway entrance is very elegant. The dormitory and vaults have been for many ages the place of sepulture of many noble and ancient families. The ruins of these interesting buildings are sequestered in overhanging woods of considerable age and growth; some of the trees are said to be upwards of three centuries old. In this vicinity, on a gentle eminence, are seen the remains of what is still known as Queen Mary's Bower, where, after the disastrous battle of Pinkie, the young princess found a safe asylum till her departure for France. The boxwood bower, with its large hawthorn in the centre, where the youthful princess passed some of her happiest days, is still an object of interest to all who visit the island. On a smaller islet, a little distance from Inchmaholm, stand the ruins of the principal residence of the Earls of Menteith. The Menteith Hotel adjoins the loch, and is capable of affording excellent accommodation to visitors who wish to enjoy the beautiful scenery of the district. The village of GARTMORE and the small hamlets of RUSKIE and HAMMERSMITH are in this parish. Gartmore possesses a library, built and presented to his birthplace by Mr. John M'Donald, a Glasgow merchant, the charge for membership being merely nominal—one shilling per annum; he also gives the rent of a house adjoining to assist in meeting current expenses. Acreage of the parish, 22,238. Population in 1881, 1,175.

STRATHYRE is a small village in the parish of Balquhidder, 8 miles N.W. from Callander, and a station on the Callander and Oban railway.

TROSSACHS (classic scenes) is a mountainous district in the west portion of the parish of Callander, and comprises the most magnificent lake and mountain scenery in Scotland. The church (quoad sacra) and manse are about a mile and a half from Loch Katrine and 8 miles from Callander. A short distance from the church is the Trossachs Hotel, an establishment well known to visitors and tourists, who come from all parts of the kingdom to enjoy the splendid scenery in the neighbourhood of the Trossachs, Loch Katrine, Loch Achray, Loch Vennacher, &c.

The BRIDGE OF TURK, made famous by the couplet—

And when the Bridge of Turk was won,
The headmost horseman rode alone, is a small hamlet in this parish, and contains a school, and the ruins of a very large and handsome hotel, which was unfortunately burned down some time ago.
